PREFATORY NOTE

IN preserving the memory of our ancestors, their domestic virtues have been scantily recorded, a neglect which demands attention. Unable to answer many inquiries for publications on early American needlework, the Massachusetts Society of the Colonial Dames took upon itself the task of remedying in part this neglect. Considering samplers to be the primary basis and training school of American needlework in the early days of the Nation, our associates have collected materials and discussed needlework in this volume.

With the wish to make this work national and not local, an appeal for aid was made to our sister societies, which brought prompt and generous response. Through their coöperation, this volume contains contributions from many of the societies of the Colonial Dames in the United States and from many interested friends. The New Jersey Society, through its chairman, Mrs. Truman Clayton, has furnished the largest number of descriptions outside of Massachusetts. Mrs. Clayton worked untiringly, and her descriptions were so clear, not only in matter but in chirography, that they were a delight to all who used them.

The late Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett, of Baltimore, had gathered for the Maryland Dames more than a hundred records of samplers from that state, which were most welcome, as our collection of Southern samplers was somewhat meager. The Connecticut and Kansas Societies, and many others, have responded to the best of their ability. Mrs. Cyrus Walker, of California, spent one of her summers in northern Maine, collecting and photographing the samplers she found there.

In March, 1920, the Rhode Island Historical Society arranged an exhibit of samplers, partly from a local interest in such things and partly to aid in the preparation of this book. It was under the direction of the librarian, Howard M. Chapin, Esq., of Providence, assisted by a committee of the Society. It was a most successful affair, and brought together nearly three hundred samplers which would not otherwise have come to our notice. Mrs. Powel, the acting president of the Colonial Dames of Rhode Island, contributed to the book descriptions of all the samplers in the exhibition.

In our own Society, Mrs. Edwin A. Daniels, of Boston, collected a very large number of descriptions.

Mrs. Henry E. Coe, of New York, who has a wonderful collection of her own, has added a very large number of descriptions, enhanced by pictures taken with her kodak. Many friends have contributed pictures, and to them our thanks are due. The Committee wishes that it could reproduce in the book many more pictures of very real interest which it has in its archives; but it has felt, in choosing the illustrations, that the pictures must be either typical or necessary to bring out some point under discussion. Therefore, those only have been chosen which exhibit American types or are interesting historically.

It is believed that there are here reproduced examples of most of the various stitches and model patterns used in such needlework. While many American samplers contain only the alphabet and numerals, with added moral mottoes, yet others display such sense of artistic feeling and tasteful ornamentation as merit attention.

The book is based upon some twenty-five hundred descriptions of samplers which have been collected by the Committee and its friends during the last five years. We have also got together nearly four hundred pictures of samplers that we felt might be especially interesting. In addition, many other samplers have been seen. The Committee believes that every book on needlework, ancient and modern, has been searched in the hope of finding material. Of course, there are many samplers that are not recorded here, for until one begins the search, it is impossible to realize how busy the fingers of our young ancestresses were. We do feel, however, that we have collected enough to have a good basis for our assertions.

In order to increase the value of this monograph, it seemed wise to focus attention on that period in which sampler work was at its best, and no samplers have been included of later date than 1830.

Although this volume comprises the work of many, the successful consummation of the plan is due to the administrative ability, enthusiasm, and ready sympathy of Mrs. Barrett Wendell, President of the Massachusetts Society of Colonial Dames.

AMERICAN SAMPLERS

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY SAMPLERS

THOSE who go fishing for whales in the ocean of the past, sometimes catch only sprats. Unfortunately, this is the result of fishing in the past for the origin of the sampler. Not only are sprats the only fish, but they are thin and very few. Just when samplers began to be worked no one now knows, for aside from a few rather casual remarks in literature, we have nothing to tell us.

The earliest mention of a sampler so far found is in 1502, when Elizabeth of York paid 8d. for an ell of linen cloth for one. Her account book shows the entry on July 10, 1502: "an for an elne of lynnyn cloth for a sampler for the Queen viii d. To Thomas Fische." John Skelton, the poet, at about this same time in Norfolk, wrote, "The Sampler to sowe on, the laxis to embroid."

In 1546, Margaret Thompson, of Freston-in-Holland, Lincolnshire, left a will, in which she says, "I gyve to Alys Pynchebeck my syster's doughter my sawmpler with semes." This last item would seem to indicate that probably the Tudor sampler, of which we have no survival, was the same long and very narrow affair that the seventeenth century shows. The loom of the day was quite narrow, and this accounts for the width of the sampler. Thus the "semes" may mean that several pieces were joined together, or perhaps, as one writer suggests, the word is used in an obsolete and transferred meaning, and shows that it was made in ordered rows, like the seventeenth century sampler. Much fine work was done to make beautiful the "open seam," which the narrow loom rendered necessary.

Certainly toward the middle of the sixteenth century the sampler was growing in popularity, for an inventory taken in the fourth year of Edward VI's reign shows:

"Item. . . . .xii samplers

"Item. . . . .one sampler of Normandie Canvas wrought with

* Harleian Manuscript No. 1419.

The raison d'être of the sampler is most practical. Needlework and embroidery were practically the only relaxation of most women, and almost everything was embroidered. In the seventeenth century a book called "Needles Excellency"* gives a list of things for which a sampler was required. They include "handkerchiefs, table cloathes for parlours or for halls, sheets, towels, napkins, pillow-beares." A long period of peace had brought luxury to the household in the sixteenth century. Napery and drapery increased, and along with them the craze for embroidery. In fact, so great was the craze, that clothing, household linen, and everything of the sort fell a victim. France had the same tendency, and in 1586 Catherine de Medici was petitioned to put a stop to it, on the plea that "mills, pastures, woods and all the revenues are wasted on embroideries, insertions, trimmings, tassells, fringes, hangings, gimps, needleworks, small chain stitchings, quiltings, back stitchings, etc., new diversities of which are invented daily." The need for the sampler lay in the fact that there were few, if any, books of patterns. Thus the sampler was the pattern-book, and long or short, contained the designs which appealed to each girl's taste. So we can imagine that each girl, as she gathered together her linen for filling one of those lovely old oak dower-chests, added a sampler to take with her on her new adventure in life.

There have been many surmises as to just how these patterns grew up in England, and many experts favor the idea that most of them came from Italy and from other foreign sources. Certainly one did, for an Italian towel shows the same design as that on Mary Hudson's sampler. (See Plate ix.)

One book tells us of "a tradition that Catherine of Aragon taught the Bedfordshire women cut-work or reticella made of linen, an art which we know to have been practised in Italy and Spain at the time, and which the early evidences of old English samplers prove to have been made, though with less taste, in England."†

* "The Needles Excellency. A New Booke wherein are Divers admirable workes wrought with the needle, newly invented and cut in Copper for the pleasure and profit of the industrious. Printed for James Boler and are to be sold at the Syne of the Marigold in Pauls Churchyard. 1632." There were twelve editions before 1640, but the book is extremely rare.

Perhaps our ancestors did have "less taste," but I think there is no question that needlework on the older English samplers is most exquisite. The earliest samplers which we know were, as has been said, very long and narrow. The upper portion was nearly always given to elaborate running designs in color of conventionalized roses, tulips, strawberries, trefoil, "Indian pink," the "tree of life," and geometric designs, either alone or in combination. Sometimes human figures were inserted, but not often, the famous "boxers" being the most frequent. The lower half was often filled with lovely drawn- or cut-work designs in white. Occasionally an alphabet appeared, but in so subordinate a position that it is quite negligible, and was evidently included merely as a pattern for marking linen. So the sampler was really an "Exemplar," as some of our modern American specimens still call it. Some early English references call them "samp-cloths" or "samplettes."

A great deal of stress has of late been laid upon the affiliation of the sampler and the horn-book, but it seems as if the horn-book, if it had any influence upon the sampler at all, was distinctly toward its degeneration. Certainly the seventeenth century sampler shows not the slightest influence of the horn-book, for it was not until the early eighteenth century that the dismal sampler, containing merely rows of alphabet, appeared at all.

But to return to the Tudor sampler, which lives only in our imagination, it is interesting to know that Sir Philip Sydney, in his "Arcadia," wrote:

"O love, why dost thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire, to set out which is impossible?"

and that Shakespeare, in the "Midsummer Night's Dream," makes Helena exclaim:

"We, Hermia, like two artificial Gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion."

Shakespeare certainly reflected the state of mind of the children of a later date, who were doomed by stern schoolmistresses to sew on samplers, when he says:

"Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind." *
(Titus Andronicus)

These first samplers had no names or dates upon them, for probably they were a continuous performance, and so could never be dated. The early ones were kept on a roll as a convenience, for one English sampler done in 1664, while but seven inches wide, was three feet long. The old samplers were always on linen, and were not done by children, but by girls and women, for very practical use. The earliest appear to be entirely of lace or drawn-work. Of seventeenth century samplers, it may also be said that the needlework in itself was more beautiful and the design more intricate and definite. One English writer goes so far as to say that the oldest were the best and the youngest the worst. That would not be entirely true of American samplers.

As the sampler grew out of the lack of books on embroidery, it is interesting to know that there was a progressive soul, one Peter Quentel, who printed a book of patterns as early as 1527. No copy exists, so far as is known; but in 1701 a similar book "gives borders and corner pieces, some few of which, at least, are derived from those included in the book of patterns for various kinds of needlework published by Peter Quentel." The ubiquitous Germans also printed a book in Nuremberg, in 1748.

There has been an amusing controversy between English and American collectors as to which nation owned the oldest dated sampler. These many years we have held the palm, for Anne Gower's sampler is in the Essex Institute in Salem, Massachusetts. Now Anne Gower became the wife of Governor Endeott before 1628; and while it was embroidered, of course, in England, the sampler itself was here, and we claimed it as American. The English connoisseurs date it at about 1610. There is one other American claimant earlier than the earliest English one of 1643; this is Loara Standish's, now in Pilgrim Hall at Plymouth. Loara Standish, the daughter of Captain Myles Standish, was born in 1623 and died before 1656. It is probable that the sampler was made before she was twenty, so that it was done before or at nearly the same time as the punto in aria sampler of Elizabeth Hinde, in 1643. This latter sampler would be more convincing if the name and date were not on finer linen sewed to the bottom.

Anne Gower's sampler was, of course, done in England, and is a good specimen of drawn-work, flet, and the flat white-stitch used on damask. So it is to Loara Standish's sampler that we must turn for our earliest American-made example. It is in the regular English style, done in blues and browns, soft now with time. The designs are intricate and beautifully done. Our Loara, besides making the first American sampler, worked upon it the first aphorism which appears upon any sampler. She began, poor Pilgrim maid, that long line of pious verse that decorates, even unto the end, both English and American samplers.

"Lord Guide my Heart that I may do Thy Will
And fill my heart with such convenient skill
As will conduce to Virtue void of Shame
And I will give the Glory to Thy Name."

She worked upon her sampler, also, "Loara Standish is my name," and so was the forerunner of that long series of girls who so indicated the work of their hands. Evidently she did not know the whole verse as it later came into use.

New England was the home of all but one of the seventeenth century samplers that have so far been reported. The next oldest after Loara Standish's was made by Mary Hollingsworth, of Salem. She was born in 1650 and married, in 1675, Phillip English, a Salem merchant. Her sampler, probably made about 1665, is typical of the time, but bears an alphabet and her name. Mary Hollingsworth English was accused of witchcraft in 1692, but escaped with her life to New York. She was so overcome by the shock of the accusation that she died soon after her escape.

At about the same time another New England maid, Sarah Lord, made a lovely sampler in 1668. It is of extremely fine needlework, and shows a tendency, which was apparently developing in America, toward shorter and broader samplers. The workmanship had not degenerated as yet, nor had the patterns, but there are fewer of them. Sarah Lord made one pattern upon her sampler in which the petals of the roses are raised and free from the groundwork, done in button-hole-stitch. Some English samplers of the same time show this form of work, in the raised draperies of ladies' dresses and men's coats.

Only two other American seventeenth century samplers have been reported, and both, perhaps, may be questioned. The first, done in 1675 by Isabella Ercy, is very attractive, though it shows the tendency toward less interesting and less elaborate design. It bears the inscription:

"WORKE. AND. LETTER<sup>d</sup>. 1675
WOULD. HAVE. MENED. BOTH.
MY. SKILL. HAD. BEN. BETTER. I.
ROUGHT. THE. SAME. BUT. IF.
WITH. NEDEL. AND. SCILK. I. W.
ISABELLA ERCY IS MY NAME."

The owner of this sampler frankly acknowledges that he does not know who Isabella Ercy was, and so we cannot be sure that it is really American after all.

The other sampler bears no name, but has the date 1698. It is long and narrow and is done in crewel in brilliant hues, which is not an especially common medium for either English or American samplers of the period.

It is impossible to call this chapter complete without mentioning three samplers which were, of course, made in England, but which have been in this country for over two hundred years. About 1650, Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Roberts, of London, was born in England. As a young girl, about to be married to a Mr. Breeden, she embroidered two samplers; one contains designs in color, and one is of punto tagliato. The lace one is signed "Elizabeth Robert," and the other has her initials "E R" many times repeated. She was a widow in 1672, when she married Colonel Samuel Shrimpton, a wealthy merchant, and owner of Noddle's Island in Boston Harbor. When she came to Boston she brought her samplers with her, as all thrifty housewives should. Later, a wealthy widow, she married Simeon Stoddard, another Boston merchant, and she lived in Boston until her death in 1713. The chief interest that these two samplers have is this: that they are the earliest samplers, either in England or America, which were worked by some one whose portrait we also have. The portrait hangs in the rooms of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and for the benefit of the curious we will say that the eyes and hair are light brown, and the dress black and white.

The third sampler, which was brought by the Quincys to New England before 1700, is signed:

"Miles Fletwood, Abigail Fletwood 1654.
In prosperity friends will be plenty, but
In adversity not one in twenty."

Mrs. Henry Quincy, who was Mary Salter and herself an expert needlewoman, gave this sampler to her daughter, with the remark that it was "an old family thing." Tradition says that a General Charles Fleetwood, of Cromwell's army, had a brother Miles who retained his allegiance to the King. His experience in those troublous times perhaps inspired the verse, if these two Miles's are the same man. The connection with the Quincys is not clear, but it is true that at this time the Quincys lived in Thorpe-Achurch and the Fleetwoods in Aldwinckle, in Northamptonshire, not thirteen miles apart. The sampler has the figures of three ladies in flowing skirts at the top. Over the central one are the initials "S. Q." The others are labeled, respectively, "A" and "E." The former owner thinks that these letters, added in steel beads, are a later addition when the sampler passed into the hands of the Quincys. The ladies themselves, as you see them depicted in the sampler, are Quincy ladies. The heads are stuffed and the dresses sewed on. Underneath the heads and the dresses are the heads of the Fleetwood ladies, and their much more archaic dresses. The back of the sampler discloses the substitution. Below the three ladies are a man and a woman on either side of an unrestful lion seated beneath a tree. The rest of the sampler is taken up with repeating designs of more or less elaborateness, and is unusual and lovely.

So the seventeenth century ended, showing several distinct tendencies in sampler art.

Samplers in America were broadening and shortening, they were becoming distinctly less interesting, and the elaborate embroidery of household linen had vanished from the land. Folk were too busy taming the wilderness to attach much importance to the frills and furbelows, and one can feel this distinctly as one realizes how very few samplers our American girls did in the seventeenth century. One may say that the sampler of that type became extinct, for while there were echoes of a design here and there in the next century, such as that of Grace Tay, it was a very feeble echo, and is more like the haunting of a ghost than anything else. The reason for the sampler had gone, and the revival was on different lines and for a different purpose. As one caustic writer says, "When meaning is gone, art and beauty vanish too." While they did vanish for a time, a purpose later crept in which gave our American samplers some art and much quaintness.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY SAMPLERS

HISTORY would be so much more comfortable for those who indulge in writing it if its terminations were more abrupt, and if its characters had a less ghost-like manner of melting into space—and lo! the place that knew them knows them no more. So it would be much more comfortable, in considering samplers, to say that when we meet a new century we meet a new style of sampler; but the truth is that it took about twenty years after the new century came in before the English sampler types became sufficiently ghostly to ignore in favor of the new and truly American development.

The maiden to be married, on her outlying farm, in her frontier town, now happily freed from Indian terror, had no use for embroidery as an accessory for either her clothes or her linen; she was thankful for either unadorned. Life in the towns, too, was hard and poor after the Indian wars had taken their toll of the Colonies' wealth. Even so, we have one beautiful specimen of the old English style which was done by Grace Tay, or Toy as she calls herself. She was born in Woburn, Massachusetts, May 18, 1704; married, in 1724, Benjamin Walker, and went with him to Andover to live. It is a beautiful example of colored and white work, a yard long; the looms were capable of making quite wide linen before this sampler was made, for the seluage is at the top and bottom. (See Plate x.)

Having laid this last ghost, we can turn to other samplers made during the same years that Grace Toy wrought, and we see the beginnings of the essentially American sampler. Let us look first at the English sampler, which also changed at this same period, but in a different way. The English sampler clung much longer than did the American to the form of the seventeenth century. By the middle of the eighteenth century, by gradual stages, it had become square and had acquired a border. It soon had verses, alphabets, and numerals; and then, toward the end of the century, more and more tended toward a mass of unrelated designs; so that in the end it looked more like a sale-sheet of a modern vender of cross-stitch designs than anything else.

We may consider that we in America were more fortunate, for while many of the samplers contain little but alphabets, numbers, and verses, separated by rows of extremely debased patterns, yet as a rule they had form and coherence of design, which the English sampler lacks.

In the first half of the eighteenth century, as in the entire seventeenth, New England furnishes by far the largest number of samplers, followed by Long Island, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. It is, perhaps, inevitable that, as the material has been collected from Boston as a center, New England should have been more easily reached and more prolifically represented than are other parts of the coast.

The girls of most of the great nations of Europe worked samplers, quite characteristic and differing in their basic essentials. The Spaniards brought the art to Mexico, but neither the early Dutch nor the early Germans seem to have brought their particular form to this country. In the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries in certain localities—such as parts of Pennsylvania—a certain Dutch or German influence can be seen, but it is quite rare; so we are really left with a very clear-cut result. We have first a century of imitation of the old English model, good but gradually degenerating, followed by a very distinct type of American sampler. It is the development of this second type with which we now have to do. It is inevitable, as one considers the schools of this century, to feel that the samplers, like the schools, fall into two classes. First came the Dame School, where the very young were taught, and where the samplers done by these small hands were very simple things indeed. And so we have the commonest form of sampler, that which contains merely alphabets and numbers. Not much from an artistic point of view, we shall all agree, but very much as an indication that our ancestresses got a little learning, meager though it was. This sampler must have been a wonderful assistance in driving home to the weary, childish brain the letter learned from her horn-book primer. And so we have poor little Mary Smith, in her sixth year, in 1714, working a simple form of the long sampler, with one large and one small alphabet. It was done on fine linen, and contained that most frequent of all verses, "Mary Smith is my name and with my nedel I wroght the same." She is not, by any manner of means, the only child of five who worked a sampler at this time.

The other form, done by the older girl at her finishing school, was, as a rule, a more elaborate object. Quite early in the century, originality began to be shown. Take, for instance, Mary Leavitt's sampler, done in 1718. Having accomplished the stupid task of embroidering four sets of alphabets separated by the simplest of cross-borders, she then, at the bottom, made a nice green hill, with one fair plant upon it, and "Ashur" and "Elisha" in long-tailed coats, white stockings, and black shoes, dancing and playing pipes thereon. (See tailpiece, page 8.) Mary Leavitt was a Salem, Massachusetts, girl; and that same year Eunice Bowditch, another Salem girl, embroidered a sampler, but she did not have Mary's originality.

By 1721 we may feel that the real American sampler is with us, for in that year Mary Daintery, aged eight, embroidered a sampler broader than it was long, and put a border all around it. This is the first example of a border as a frame which has come to our notice on an authentic American sampler, though of course there may be earlier cases. In the upper center stands the figure of Christ, and all around and beneath is "PUBLIUS LENTULUS his Letter to the Senate OF Rome Concerning JeSUS ChrIST (&c.)." (See Plate xi.) This fascinating sampler is owned on Long Island, but came from a farmhouse near New Haven, Connecticut. Until 1730, with this one exception, the samplers are, as a rule, alphabets separated by very simple cross-borders, with little or no design. A few had framing borders. The childish hands were not able to make the lovely, complicated "Indian pink," the rose, and "Tree of life" that the older girls of a previous century had done so beautifully. So we have simple strawberry, acorn, and Greek frets, varied occasionally with a vine made free-hand. One small girl, in 1724, Mary Frye, made a cross-border of hearts, and her biographer tells of her that "she was an orphan from infancy, but an heiress and a belle, if a devout Quaker maiden can be called a belle. When young Samuel Willis fell in love with her, he found he must win her from many competitors. But he had this in his favor, she was his father's ward and was dwelling under his father's roof."

In 1730, Pennsylvania contributes a wonderful sampler; it is only saved from ostracism as a needlework picture by the fact that Mary or Martha Bulyn signed and dated it. Thus early in the century does the decision as to what a sampler is and what is a needlework picture have to be made. The needlework picture of the period, like many that preceded it, was done all over the linen canvas in either petit-point, cross-stitch, or, occasionally, tent-stitch. This form of needlework had been done in England since the days of the Conqueror. Our ancestors, lacking pictures and feeling the need for some form of wall decoration, used the needlework pictures and samplers in that way. The story has come down to us of one little girl who left out her middle name when she worked her sampler. She put the initial in up above, but her parents were so annoyed at the omission that as a punishment they refused to frame her sampler. Poor nite! she may have hated that middle name as many of us hate ours to this day.

To return to our muttons, an arbitrary ruling was felt to be necessary to distinguish between these two forms, and so all needlework signed and dated by the maker has been accepted as a sampler. Thus we have had to eliminate much that was lovely and interesting. Mary Bulyn's sampler is of a shepherdess beneath a tree, surrounded by her flocks and dogs. The perspective is what one expects on a sampler of any age; the flowers are much bigger than the sheep, and the birds that roost upon the tree inevitably, in any other world, would tear it limb from limb, so large and fat are they. But it is most charming. (See Plate xii.) Just at this same time, Pennsylvania gave us another form of sampler. Two lines of verse and then a rather elaborate cross-border, in some cases returning to seventeenth century design; then two more lines and another border, and so on, the whole framed in a simple border or not, as the ease might be. (See Plate xiii, Sarah Howell, Plate exi, and Abigail Pinniger, Plate exii.) This precise form appears but once after 1735, though the alternation of verse and cross-borders in other mixtures does appear spasmodically. The exception is Ann Tatnal's sampler, done in Delaware in 1785; and it is so like the Pennsylvania ones, both in form and detail, as to make us suspect that she copied an early one. Even from the beginning, when Loara Standish put her short verse upon her sampler, pious verse was always an adjunct. Verse was not inevitable; sometimes there were prose quotations of a religious nature, often the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, or a metrical version of the Ten Commandments. The Lord's Prayer and the Creed were most frequently done in a form to reproduce the tablets to be seen, during the eighteenth century, in the east end of English and American Episcopal churches. Hannah Trecothick, of Boston, did one such in 1738, and she had many followers. (See Plate xiv.)

About this time some school, evidently near Boston, conceived the idea of using Adam and Eve and the apple as a subject for the religious enlightenment of its pupils. Two samplers, done in 1741, and one in 1753, are practically identical, design for design. The apple trees are laden with fruit of such a size as to make the modern farmer green with envy. Adam is accompanied by a goose and Eve by a rabbit. Let us hope that there was no irony in the tender minds of those whose fingers wrought so well. And each of the six figures presses one hand upon man's dearest spot, as if already each felt the result of the coming indigestible meal. The serpent—he looks much more like a fat angle worm—embraces the tree with one or more coils, tempting our universal mother. The fig leaves are large and very modest. In 1745, we find another version of the story, for Adam and Eve face us; and Adam has one of those lovely beards, now so little seen, running under the chin and up in front of the ears, which most Irish laborers of our early childhood fancied. Eve has an enormous quantity of hair, and the serpent has his eye on all comers. He is just as short and fat as his predecessors. Thereafter, Adam and Eve appear quite often, but later times were far more modest and less true to history than were our mid-eighteenth century grandmothers. (See Plates xv and xvi.)

One other sampler of the forties is unique. Mary Ellis, of Milton, Massachusetts, inside a border made a hundred diamonds, and on the diamonds embroidered the multiplication table. Only a few of the figures are still visible. Of course she made such a sampler at school, for no one but a schoolmarm would condemn any small girl to such a task as making a hundred diamonds all alike for such a prosaic result. Perhaps Mary wasn't good at arithmetic and needed severe discipline. (See Plate xvii.) At this time, too, we first find the two spies returning from Palestine, bearing between them the grapes of Eschol. Needless to say that none of our sampler artists in any way scamped the bunch, which was usually carried between the two staggering men upon a pole.

About 1750, the sampler becomes a much freer and more original piece of work than was true of the first half of the century. The "period of gloom," as so many writers designate the first fifty years, was over. The wilderness, so far as our original thirteen states were concerned, was pretty well conquered, and prosperous towns had taken the place of struggling and toiling settlements. Once again the amenities of life could be considered, and once again the children had some leisure to cultivate them. The result is an increasing variety of design. In fact, if we look at Elizabeth Pecker's sampler, made at the age of fifteen in 1750, we may realize that the sampler artist at this time went back to nature for her models—more or less. Two trees stand on hillocks on either side, with birds both roosting and flying. Between stands a mammoth basket of flowers. Deer, dogs, and enormous fowl disport themselves on the greensward for the edification of a damsel in the lower left-hand corner. She is dressed, not in embroidery, but in a lovely brocaded skirt, appliquéd upon the canvas, and she has a lock of real red-gray hair upon her head. (See Plate xviii.) The truth is that we had so few models that we were forced to try to depict the scenes around us. We began with animals and trees, and later progressed to more complicated scenes. Western Pennsylvania,* in 1755, contributes a sampler with verses and a tapestry design in diamond shapes; while the next year conservative Massachusetts, under cross-borders of the older style, gives us an orchard scene† with an apple tree, two deer, two rabbits, two bumblebees, and two eagles. "The animals walked in two by two" upon her sampler. The chief interest, however, lies in the fact that this is the first time that eagles, later symbolic of the country, appear. The same year Sarah Afflick, whom we suspect of Pennsylvania lineage, put three open baskets at the bottom of her sampler, and therein vines of an infinite variety of leaves upon the same parent stems; while tulips, pinks, roses, peonies, and flowers only conceived by the imaginative mind of seven adorn the vines also. And while we laugh, we know that it is very lovely as a piece of design, harmonious in color, and covering the space most interestingly. Really it is a sampler of Oriental design tinged with American feeling, and is unique in its appeal.

It would be unfair to leave this period without mentioning Dorothy Lynde's sampler, now forever on exhibition at the Old South Church on Washington Street, Boston. Most of it is beautifully worked petit-point, with just enough embroidery in other stitches to give it the needed variety. Overhead is a very startled-looking sun, flanked on either side by a cherub. Below, on either side of the square containing the lettering and verse, stand two figures upon pedestals. The left-hand one carries a book, and some one has carefully cut out the head. Below is a rural scene; a shepherdess and crook, a bounding, spotted black dog, and two meek sheep with huge black eyes. The coloring is lovely, and the illustration gives but a poor idea of its beauty. (See Plate xix.)

When once you have let originality run riot, you cease to have conventionality, and it becomes increasingly hard to say that any sampler belongs to any period, because it may be a survival of an older period, copied by a girl in an isolated town where new models were hard to come at. Perhaps that is the secret of the charm of samplers, that they were distinctly the expression of the mind of the girl or of her mother or her teacher, and so they are pretty nearly as varied as the mind of man. Even among those which have alphabets alone, there are seldom two alike, because the form varies and so does the color. Probably it is lucky for us that many years separate us from the new and freshly done sampler. Home-dyed colors were, as a rule, quite soft and lovely, and the combinations were almost always felicitous and according to our taste—if it is still uncorrupted by futurist art. It is, perhaps, cruel to say it of the Shakers, but it seems as if they alone had held over from an earlier century their delight in crude and clashing colors, such as our ancestresses used in their youth and inexperience. These distressing mixtures time and the sun have softened and blended into an harmonious whole.

And so, having turned to nature as a model, these dear girls saw it through the distorted glasses of their imagination. And the result? A wonderful mixture of animals, birds, trees, houses, urns, baskets of flowers and fruit. Vines bearing six kinds of flowers are the ordinary sort on samplers. Perspective there was none, and comparative size matters not at all. Usually our beruffled shepherdess is at least three times the size of her house, and once in a while her sheep are so large that they might swallow her whole without inconvenience. But all this was a fairy story, taking form under the child's needle, and all such things happen naturally in fairy tales. Sometimes the children painted in the faces of their people; sometimes they gave them the real hair of the person whose portrait they were attempting.

About 1760 began the period when no sampler was quite complete without its pious verse, and it makes our untheological modern minds ache to think what these children must have been like, if their verses and sayings were anything more than conventional usage. Yet when one reads the records of almost any town, it is to have the realization thrust upon one that at that time theological discussion gave the most abounding joy to our forefathers. So why should not the children, too, have put forth their religious or pious convictions upon the sampler which was to hang upon the wall? They wished to show that they were not one whit behind their elders in taking up cudgels for their pet dogma, to show that death and the tomb had no terrors for their well-prepared souls.

Mary Webb, a nice little Pennsylvania girl, in 1760 made a clever sampler. She encircled it with a carnation border, and turned the corners with a tulip. Inside she divided the space into nine squares. The middle and the corners she decorated with delightful flowers, and in the four remaining squares embroidered her pious sentiments. She also gives a hint here of the genealogical sampler soon to come, for she put her parents' names upon it. This type, which is quite unusual in America, was more common in England. Perhaps she copied some English model brought overseas. (See Plate xx.)

The genealogical sampler, in all its glory, did not come into ripe fruition until late in the eighteenth century, but as early as 1730 Ann Robins put her father's, mother's, and grandparents' names upon her sampler. Sarah van Forhies, in 1742, embroidered the initials of her family, and the habit was quite common until the real genealogy came to displace them. Margaret Swain, in 1754, embroidered the initials, but she went a step farther and added the dates of births and deaths. Catherine Van Maater, in 1765, records that her "Father" was Daniel Van Maater, her mother, Mary Covenhaven, and that her brothers and sisters were Sarah, Gilbert, Micah, and Milly.

The first real genealogy seems to be of the Olmsteads, of Connecticut, made in 1774, but it has not half the charm of one done by an unknown girl, recording an unknown family, which probably resided in or near Springfield, Massachusetts:

"Phoebe	Born April 7, 1751
"Lew"	bor feb 23, 1753
"Zebbo"	Au 29, 1755
"Cal"	bor Jun 29, 1758

and then only initials up to the last child's birth in 1771.

From 1780, on to the end of the century, the real genealogy and the one containing initials only, flourished side by side, but were never nearly as common as they were after 1800. These samplers are just as useful to the student as the Family Bible, and should be cherished for their information with equal care.

It is just at this time that the little Dutch sampler of Catherine van Schaick was done in Albany. The border is difficult to place; two birds stand on two unnameable objects, one of which may be a house. She signed it "C V S-OUT 10-JAER 1763". (See Plate xxi.)

By 1766, the South had taken up Adam and Eve, and Sally Rea gives us a very interesting example. Adam and Eve, encircled in ballet skirts of fig leaves, stand in the attitude of the minuet, holding the apple together. The serpent coiled around the tree leans out and whispers in Eve's ear, while her accompanying rabbit stands in a scared attitude, ready to run at need. Adam, who looks a most courtly and smiling gentleman, is in this instance accompanied by two very interested dogs, one white with black decorations, the other "counter-changed." The whole thing is adorable, and envy surges in your breast. (See Plate xxii.)

The same year a child in Dighton, Massachusetts, Bath-sheba Searing her name, began that noble series of samplers which grew from picturing one's own house and yard to putting public buildings on the "carpet" of the sampler, and finally led to the delineation of whole towns. (See tailpiece, p. 254, the town of Crawford, New Hampshire.) Bath-sheba made a picture of her nice, hip-roofed brick house, and she pictured her mother in one window and her father in the other. Sarah van Forhies, of New Jersey, mentioned above, had made a house in 1742, but it seems to have been an isolated experiment and had no copiers until this later time.

About this time, too, the girls in the Southern states began to make samplers. South Carolina has one as early as 1752, and Georgia in 1763. Sarah Jones, of Savannah, did the Ten Commandments in verse, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, surrounded it with a flowered vine, and added a basket and flowers. It was not only Puritan New England, but the South also, which mixed religion and samplers inextricably. Philadelphia, in the person of Elizabeth Coleman, offers

Pope's "Universal Prayer"; and so it is with relief that we turn to Margaret Calef and her wonderful scene, undisturbed by pious sentiments. This Middletown, Connecticut, girl shows us the fruit of her imagination in most beautiful petit-point. There is a brick castle with high tower and many windows, with five straight poplar trees looking over the roof; on either side an apple tree, and on the lawn in front a lamb and a mottled dog. To the left, a wasp-waisted lady sits on a chair, with one dog behind and one with three white spots leaping up in front. She holds an enormous rose to her painted face. Before her stands her husband, long, buttoned coat, silk stockings, and shoes, all of the latest cut, his queue correctly tied, holding a parrot in his hand. And as a background, high hills, with poplar trees and deer, and a huge tulip plant, that dwarfs the trees. The sky is cloudy and contains one star. Each time you look you find some new delight. And if you love this sampler, doubly will you love Hannah Johnson's, made in 1768 in "Newbury Newton" (Newburyport). Never before and never again will the mind of child conceive such a flirtatious and lovely cow as Hannah Johnson did. The deer with which she's flirting is almost as charming. (Plates xxiii and xxiv.)

The next decade seems to have been given over to country scenes, to shepherds and shepherdesses, flocks and herds, houses and farm buildings. It also introduced a new stitch which was developed in two ways. At this period appears the crinkled silk, which looks as if it were unwound from larger and tight-twisted hanks. This silk is most commonly applied in long stitches as a background for vines or animals in a closer satin-stitch. Occasionally it is appliquéd, when the embroidery represents the bricks of a house or something else appropriate. At one school in Essex County, Massachusetts, taught by Sarah Stivour, the children used long stitches in this crinkly silk to represent the grass and sky. The particular use is limited to that school, and to the years between 1778 and 1786. Work from her school can be identified at a glance. (See Plates xc and xci.)

GRACE TOY'S SAMPLER. Woburn, Mass. Cir. 1877

The scenes depicted become more elaborate during this ten years, and are saved from being classed as needlework pictures by a very narrow margin. This is true as far south as Georgia. But even in their elaboration, the feeling persists that if one could only really know their history, many samplers that are now far separated over the country were made under the same school-mistress's eye. These samplers are not always identical, but the whole action and design savor of the same controlling mind. Grace Welsh, Sukey Makepeace, Abigail Mears, and perhaps Elizabeth Pecker, who used a form of hunting scene, illustrate very well the probable common origin of a group. (See Plates xxv, cvi, xxvi, and xviii.)

Now the stiff cross-stitch trees of a former decade give place to those with gracefully bending trunks, and tops that look like dejected and lop-sided feather dusters. This is well exemplified on Betsey Adams's sampler. She lived in Quincy, Massachusetts, as all the great Adamses did, but I'm sure that she never saw the prototype of those trees in Quincy. (See Plate xxvii.)

The children of this decade abandoned cross-stitch and its kindred stitches more than their predecessors, and used satin-stitch increasingly. They also added queen-stitch, with very pleasing results, and often included punch-work fruit.

It would be unfair to leave the time of the Revolution without mentioning the unknown child who embroidered Christ at the foot of a huge tree, with arms outstretched. From the branches hang fruit labeled "Peace," "Sanctification," "Election," "Refuge," "Repent," "Buffeting," "Temptation," "Reproach," "Everlasting Love," "Death," and many more. This and Mary Daintery's, earlier in the century, are the only representations of Christ on samplers so far known. (See Plate xxviii.)

A form of sampler very common in England was little used in this country, though a few have been recorded—the map sampler. The earliest example which has come to light in the Colonies was a map of France done on an oval of satin by Frances Brenton, of Newport, Rhode Island, in 1775. Perhaps the education of the girls began at this period to include a knowledge of the world outside their own narrow horizon. Ann Smith made a map of Europe in 1787. Later, in 1793, Betty Scott, whose mother became John Hancock's second wife, made a beautiful map of England, very accurate, and beautifully worked. It was, perhaps, one of those stamped in England and brought to this country. At one time they were very popular with English damsels. Five years later, Leonora Louisa Spechet also made a map of England, and Frances Wade made a map of North and South America, which was of her own drawing, one might surmise. Her geography was almost as frenzied as that during the war, and even Mercator's projection looks far less queer. (See Plate xxix.)

During the last years of the Revolution, the sampler began to increase in the land. Originality ran riot, and everything that the children saw was pictured with more or less fidelity to nature. Perhaps the most interesting pair of samplers done in the 1780's are two which come from Tuckerton, New Jersey. They are painted samplers done by John Mason, in 1780, and by Sarah Platt, about 1784. (See Plate xxx.) Sarah painted a picture of herself in an oval at the bottom, and we should guess that John tried to portray his father and mother. The pair of samplers is most interesting, and calls to mind that later, by some fifty years, pen and ink samplers were accomplished by some pupils in the schools. They are quite rare now, as, of course, paper is much more perishable than linen.

There is a unique little sampler in Essex County, Massachusetts, which was cut in the form of a Liberty Bell, with a little ring at the top. It was done by "Rocksalana Willes," in 1783. What she put on the sampler was neither very artistic nor interesting, but it certainly was of the era. (See Plate xxxi.)

Two years later, Hannah Janney made a sampler, and worked upon it a verse "On Education." One might almost feel that this was truly prophetic on her part, for later she became the mother of Johns Hopkins, who founded the University which bears his name. Just at this time began that most interesting series of pictures of Brown University which is discussed in the chapter on Schools. They are so lovely that it is impossible to refrain from mentioning them again here. From the college on the hill at Providence to Pennsylvania is not so very far, so at the same time that our New England maidens were learning to embroider what they saw, little Ann Buller made her unique contribution in Philadelphia. She pictured scenes which never were on sea or land. One can almost see the child sitting in wrapt silence, drinking in the strange tales of some sailor-man who had been overseas and in far Eastern lands. He had told her of the Arab in his tent, of camels, and flocks, and herds. Perhaps she remembered Abraham sitting in his tent door, with all his flocks around him. And then she constructed her amazing country. In the middle, at the right, sits her hero in the door of a large, white tent, while before him graze six of the leanest sheep that sampler-land has ever produced. Next a lean cow stands, wondering, with mournful eyes; and then a woman and two men, in modern dress, one of whom holds a camel by its bridle. Below two camels, with protuberant necks, eat fruit from two trees, and a man and woman stand near a well-house. Desert camels and a typical New World well! (See Plates xxxii and xxxiii.)

Then we come to the very modest era when Adam and Eve went clothed to their doom, and fig leaves were insufficient. In Salem, Massachusetts, there was a Quaker maid who pictured Adam and Eve in plain Quaker dress, with Cain and Abel standing beside them in knee breeches. The "tree of knowledge" is there and many animals, but Rebekah Hacker's childish heart was too tender toward the sinful pair to put in the serpent as a reminder of their fall. Margaret Ramsay (see Plate xxxiv) helped out our first parents in a different way, for she planted her tree of knowledge just outside the garden fence, and back of its flower-borders she put a comfortable cottage, with nice lace windows. From this time on, Adam and Eve again become a favorite theme, clothed or unclothed, fat or lean. Meanwhile, all through the period, we have lovely pictures of workless shepherds courting with pipes the equally workless shepherdesses; beside them bloom flowers as large as cabbages. Their houses are flanked with trees, or, as Lucy Cushing embroidered her home, set between two enormous sunflowers reaching the second-story windows. Newport and Sally Munro give us a wonderful doctor's gig with a horribly knock-kneed horse. (See Plate xxxv.)

By 1790, the variety of sampler work was infinite. Two Philadelphians, Jane Humphreys and Elizabeth Lehman, and one Delaware girl, Mary Clark, each made on fine linen a basket filled with flowers in the finest "hollie-point." These three samplers are exquisite things, and most beautifully wrought. By this time, sampler making seems to have become an art and many new stitches came in fashion, so Zebiah Gore made her lambs in bullion-stitch. One often wonders just how the child carried out the design which she or her teacher had conceived. Sally Baldwin, of Providence, never finished her sampler, and so our question is answered. A house and a cow stand stark in their nakedness of pen and ink. In one case, the needle and thread are left to this day in a child's unfinished work. (See Plates xxxvi-xxxix.)

At the end of the century, we are on the verge of several new methods of work. Again, alas! the magic of a new century does not create the beginning of a new era sharply, though one may feel that the increasing prosperity of the country and the awakening interest in the education of girls elaborates and develops what has gone before. Pious verse is not always a sine qua non, and at times neither verse nor alphabet appear. The borders, done now as fancy wills, are not the old repeating designs which have held sway since first the sampler formed part of the maiden's outfit.

The genealogical sampler had had no great vogue, and the new century was to develop that form most interestingly. Houses at this period begin to sit on terraces, each step of which displays a tree, and on many samplers the house is broader than this pyramid of green lawns. True to this pastoral era, sheep and a shepherd invariably disport upon the lawns. Beulah Hollinshead was the first girl, apparently, who started this fashion, which the new century adopted most enthusiastically.

Ann Macomber, in the last year of the century, revived a fashion originally set by Miss Polly Balch, of Providence, Rhode Island, at her school. No one, apparently, had followed her idea of depicting public buildings, until Ann Macomber put Liberty Hall, Philadelphia, upon her work. She set the building in more rural surroundings than we are used to associating with it, for a horse and two dogs run merrily about in the grass on either side. (See Plates xl and xli.)

During the study of the records and pictures which make up the material from which these facts are drawn, certain small things obtrude themselves and give a human interest to all this needlework. We are struck, at first, by the number of surnames which have died out in the course of years. Perhaps some of them have only gone West, leaving no one in the East to carry on the family. Certain it is that many names are strangers to their east-coast homes now. Again, the names left by the Roundheads impress us, and we meet Constant Brayton, Content Silsbee, Content Wing, Faithy Trumbull, Desire Williams, Temperance Matthews, and Charity Peters. Our forefathers were greatly daring in their choice of names, as witness: Rosefair Brooks, Welthe Barker, Lucretia Creaton, Sarah Doubt, Perese Hopton, Leafea Ide, Maieson Howard, Rocksallana Willes, Robe A. Ormsbee, Lendamine Draper, Increase Githernon, Sibilah Moore, and Petheny Geer. The most amazing family as to names, however, was the Jones family, duly recorded with births and deaths in 1797. Perhaps the name Jones seemed too feeble in its appeal, and so "Pappa" and "Mamma" Jones named their children Thetis, Thisbe, Sabra, Atlas, the twins Mithra and Luna, and Andes. No one could ever brand that Jones family as commonplace.

Another interest is in noticing just what each girl says about her work. They "wrought" it in many ways, according to their own testimony. One was "written by Tabitha Smith Feb 18th 1713 being then aged 9 years." Sometimes they tell when they began, as did Sarah Troup, in 1738; and some are cryptic, like the child who says, "I made it in the year of January 1st 1751." Most children tell you when they finished their work, and you can almost feel the pride with which they worked the date. There are, however, some rather odd ways of conveying their meaning:

"In the year of our Lord, 1793".

"Hannah Sanderson Her Exemplar", 1789.

"Drusilla Tomlin Her Sampler and Work", 1793.

But of them all, none gives the hustling American view of life so succinctly as did one child in the strained year of the outbreak of the Revolution:

"Sarah Ann Souder worked this in great speed
And left it here for you to read."

Of the children who embroidered samplers, there were some who deserve mention because they themselves or their near relatives became well-known. We have recorded the sampler of Abigail Williams, granddaughter of the "Redeemed Captive" of Deerfield, Massachusetts, the Rev. John Williams. Abigail Wadsworth, of Hartford, whose sampler is dated 1730, was the daughter of Jonathan Wadsworth, the great Indian fighter, and granddaughter of Joseph, who hid the Charter in the "Charter Oak." Dorcas Gatcomb, who made a sampler two years later, became the wife of John Welch, who carved the original "Codfish" weathervane, now in the Old State House; and a sampler having a date somewhat later, 1751, bears the name of Dorcas Welch, daughter of the carver. Abigail Janney, as we have mentioned before, was the mother of Johns Hopkins. Mary Sterrett, of Baltimore, made a sampler when she was eleven; at sixteen, a famous beauty and belle, she had married Richard Gittings, of Long Green, Maryland. The Massachusetts Historical Society owns a pair, one done by the sister and one by the niece of Governor Thomas Hutchinson, of Massachusetts. Doubtless there were other famous people in this long list of girls, but their fame has not come down to us.

Various other strange things may be noted in passing. Mary Studley, of Portsmouth, made two samplers in 1753, and so far as we know broke all known records by each one. The habit of sampler makers, as a rule, was to make the numerals from 1 to 9 and then to add a 0. Sometimes they go to 12, and once in a while to 20; but

PLATE XII

MARY OR MARTHA BELYS. Kensington, Pa. 1730

Owned by Mrs. Frederick F. Thompson

Mary Studley made one sampler with the numerals from 1 to 49, and another one marked from 1 to 50. One sampler bears two dates and two names, that of "Mary Wheatley, 1760," and "Isabella Thompson, 1797." Apparently, Mary Wheatley never finished her work, and Isabella Thompson used the unfinished linen to try her skill. Margaret Starr, in 1795, worked the name of William Cox with her design, and so helps us all to suspect a romance.

Roman numerals were only occasionally used on samplers. Elizabeth Holyoke said that her age was xiii in 1784, and Susanna Holyoke confessed to x in 1790.

The average age of the sampler makers after the seventeenth century was about thirteen, but we have a record of one made by a woman of sixty. At the other end of the scale we find Mary Smith, who was six years old in the year "17014." In her fifth year, Agnes Rust made one which was only three and a half inches wide, but sixteen inches long. Polly Fuller, in 1790, was only four years old; and Catherine Bispham, in 1755, was five. Phebe Cash, a Negro child belonging to the widow of Dudley Atkins, Esq., of Newbury, Massachusetts, worked her sampler in 1789. We might add that there are at least three in the collection done by boys. Lemuel Vose, of Milton, Massachusetts, worked one in 1773; and two years earlier, Gideon Freeborn, of Rhode Island, embroidered one. He covered the canvas with diagonal lines in black, with diamonds of yellow, purple, pink, green, blue, and red between. It would seem to be a rather garish sampler. Nicholas Bleecker, of Albany, worked one in 1790.

And so the century ended which had seen the growth of a truly American handicraft, crude in many cases, but a real and sincere effort to develop artistically. Best of all, it was a growth along original lines, and no slavish copying of English models; for the American sampler, bound by no conventional type, is more varied and more interesting from 1740 on than its English cousin. Being a freer art, the result is generally pleasing and often quite beautiful.

NINETEENTH CENTURY SAMPLERS

IN looking over a large number of American samplers, we find the dates between 1800 and 1810 occurring with such frequency that we begin to realize that when embroidery revived with the other arts of peace after the Revolution, it was considered high time to show the mother country that our daughters could produce specimens of fine needlework which were not merely copies of old designs.

In the preceding centuries, when England was producing her most beautiful work, life in the Colonies had been too hard and too serious to allow of much attention to the gentle arts except in rare cases, and the few samplers produced at that time were generally direct copies of English models. But with the opening years of the nineteenth century, our independence and originality were shown by the branching out on quite different lines; and if, at times, we find these early conceptions a trifle crude, it must be remembered that these samplers may not be judged as critically as those of a more mature civilization. Indeed, even in the nineteenth century, Colonial life was no bed of roses. The old Pryor Mill, in Bergen County, New Jersey, the birth-place of the little sampler maker, Sarah Van Horne, 1827, was run by tidewater, and we are told that her father often had to arise in the middle of the night to grind the grain.

In England, the early nineteenth century brought a type of sampler not highly esteemed by English collectors. The specimens abound in small figures and objects not well adapted to needlework, especially when worked in the ubiquitous cross-stitch, and contrast unfavorably with the wonderful samplers of an earlier day, so rich in beautiful designs adapted from all that was best in the patterns brought from Italy and elsewhere. The funny little houses and figures, neat and tidy, but so evidently copied from pattern books, seem trivial compared to the fine, early embroideries, though there is nothing to criticize in the quality of stitchery exhibited. It is wonderfully fine—we do not like to let our minds dwell on the fearful strain to those young eyes!

It was just the reverse with the American sampler of the same period. Those whose interest is centered entirely on the fine stitchery done on delicate fabrics will find comparatively little to admire, for although fine work does exist, it is, however, not a general characteristic. Such critics should learn to view these youthful efforts from a completely different standpoint, appreciating the handicaps under which they were made, watching the development of the design which reflected the life of that day, and thus getting at the spirit and true character of the American work; or else they would do well to confine themselves to the study of the better regulated sampler of the English schools. It is important to realize the conditions and influences that made the English and American samplers of the nineteenth century so unlike. For one thing, pattern books were exceedingly scarce on this side of the Atlantic, and although the practice of making samplers in schools grew with the years, many children lived in remote villages far away from such advantages, and were forced to draw on their own surroundings for inspiration. Aid in composing the design must have been frequently sought from older friends or members of the family, and as they were not past masters in the art of drawing, it led to many amusing inaccuracies in perspective and proportion. For instance, notice Rebecca Slim's gigantic mouse, 1830. He would have had great difficulty in squeezing through the door of her little house.

Another difficulty lay in the materials available, which did not lend themselves especially well to very fine work, much of the linen being of a coarse, loose weave, with threads that were apt to pull together awkwardly when cross-stitch was used. Occasionally a child was lucky enough to procure fine muslin or tiffany for a groundwork; the latter lends a peculiar lightness and richness to the background, the colors stand out well upon it, but unfortunately it cracks and disintegrates easily. The silk, much of it home-dyed, must have been originally in a very thick twist, which had to be unraveled before being used, for this is the only way we can account for the crinkly floss we see so often in the embroidery of the flowers, lawns, animals, and figures, as well as in the backgrounds, and which lends itself particularly well to the petals of the flowers worked in satin or split-stitch. But when it comes to embroidering a church, where the stitches extend the entire distance from the steeple to the ground without a break, the result is fragile, and such a piece of work should be preserved under glass. Silk of this variety is practically never seen in foreign embroideries. It is different from the floss used occasionally on the English samplers, and is quite peculiar to our country. The kink is very close and not a general wave, and was probably considered pleasing in its effect. If it was a product of China and Japan, and brought home by the old American sea captains, it is strange that the English captains did not do likewise. Why were they less thoughtful of their families' needs?

Usually the designs were drawn directly on the linen with pen or pencil, but sometimes the back of a sampler shows, by the bits of paper still sticking to it, that the outline was drawn on thin paper and placed under the linen, the design showing through, and the paper being torn away after the embroidery was finished. The sampler of Julia Ann Hoffner, where a vivid green bird is to be seen enjoying a meal of scarlet berries growing on an oak, was worked in this way.

From time immemorial, stitchery has been found a difficult medium for the portrayal of the human face. Undoubtedly even the mature embroiderers of the seventeenth century gave sighs of relief as they traced the last eyebrow or curved the final smile on the placid face of the king or queen in their needlework pictures. How much more difficult the problem for the American sampler maker, usually a little girl under twelve years of age! When the canvas was small and the figures so tiny that a black cross-stitch could stand for each eye and a long stitch for the mouth, they could cope with the difficulty; but in the larger and more ambitious scenes, where ladies reclined under a tree or stood in front of a sylvan altar, it was a different matter. It was felt that these pictured people should wear the bland, almost simpering expression considered "comme il faut" for females of the period, and so the custom arose of helping out the embroidered design by painting the face and hands.

Wilamina Rine, 1813, and Mary Hamilton, 1812 (Plate xlviii), used watercolor, which possibly gave a satisfactory effect at the time, but their tints have become somewhat faint with the lapse of years; perhaps the tiffany or fine muslin of their samplers would not allow of any other method. Clarissa and Sophia Emerson (Plate xlix), who may have been sisters or relatives, since their work is similar in style and date, used oil paint on the heavy linen, but the effect is a little hard. Laura Bowker (Plate l), 1817, showed a good deal of ingenuity in painting a face for her shepherdess, for she cut it out of paper and pasted it on the linen, and she did the same with some lambs made of kid, and added richness to her cedar trees by embroidering them in chenille. Ann E. Kelly (Plate xcyii), 1825, gives an ethereal look to her damsel, devoutly offering a sacrifice on an altar, by inserting the painted face under the thin muslin. The effect is very good; in fact, this is the most successful of all these experiments. In other cases the distant view is helped out by paint, as in the Loring family record, or in the reflection in the water which we see in Lucy Stickney's sampler (Plate li), 1830, showing the house and trees on Charlestown Neck, near Boston. A most realistic effect was sometimes given by applying small squares of mica to represent glass in the windows of houses, the frames being indicated by criss-cross threads, but this idea was borrowed from our English cousins. So we find that our ancestresses evolved ideas of their own for surmounting difficulties, though the paint and other extra touches may not have been applied by the same hands that worked the samplers.

In some sections of the country, quaint old ribbons were used as borders, making a neat and pretty edge. Sometimes two ribbons of different widths and contrasting colors were elaborately quilled, one on top of the other, with rosettes at the corners. Again, loops of the embroidery silk were sewed on in clusters, making tufts or rosettes as a further embellishment. Elizabeth Funk (Plate lii), 1813, uses a narrow lute-string ribbon, gathered and shaded darker at the bottom, giving a pretty effect. The custom of using quilled ribbon as an edging was much in vogue among the German sampler makers, and the name of Funk suggests Pennsylvania Dutch parentage, although the sampler is thoroughly—rather peculiarly—American in design. Elizabeth evidently wished to make the date symmetrical, so, regardless of accuracy, she embroidered the 3 backward in order to make it balance with the 8.

Some of the floral wreaths encircling the verses and names of the less elaborate samplers are very pretty and graceful, as in Sophia Catherine Bier's work (Plate liii), 1810, and one does not regret the absence of the more ambitious scenes. In this same category is one made by Sophia Lamborn (Plate liv), whose design is very similar to those used in the lamp-wick embroidery or tufted bedspreads of that day; perhaps she may have appropriated the pattern from her mother's bed linen.

There is no doubt that the practice of making samplers ran in families. In one case, five successive generations embroidered them, the first dating back to 1750, and the fifth a production of the last decade.

Most of the examples of the nineteenth century were made by rather young children, the average age being eleven, though some poor tots mark theirs as having been made at a much earlier age, even as young as six or seven. On the other hand, many girls put off the task until they were almost grown. But, on the whole, we think of them as a product of youth, and it comes as a distinct surprise to find Hannah Crafts, at the ripe age of sixty, embroidering a rather elaborate sampler, with a picture of her own home at the bottom labeled, "Sweet Home, the dearest spot on earth to me." Her heart probably reverted to the days of her youth, when samplers were even more prevalent, and she doubtless reproduced those she remembered, instead of copying the work of the young people about her. She started to cover the canvas like tapestry, but failing eyesight or some other ill prevented its completion, for this was years ago—before the era of giddy grandmothers, when a woman of sixty was considered old and was often crippled with rheumatism.

The girls' names appearing on the samplers are a study in themselves, and very different from those now in vogue. Submit Weyman, Remember Emmerton, Electe Phillips are reminiscent of Puritan days. Achsa Clark, Asenath Holman, Keturah Moore, Tamson Mulford are Bible names. Philadelphia Webb suggests a connection with the Quaker city; Lovey and Nabby (the latter occurring rather frequently) are probably nicknames; Britannia Holbrook proclaims her English parentage. But where did Amersha Arnold, Lucinthia Cone, Emiraney Howe, Roxa Tainter, Anzolette Hassan, Oceana Harris, Frelove Turner, Waite Phetteplace, and, most sonorous of all, Amorena D. T. Roberts, acquire their names? One wonders if in large families the stock of names became exhausted and the parents were obliged to draw on their imaginations. In the Field family register, the mother's maiden name was Miss Piana Petty. On a sampler dated 1827, we find the following statement:

"Brooksania Waters is my name
Milford is my station
Milford is my place abode
And Christ is my Salvation."

Another delightful name is Parley Bates, who in 1811 made a record, with one of the pretty, bright red herry-like borders that were popular in the vicinity of Providence: the berries done in a sort of coarse and effective cat-stitch. Parley's twin brother's name was Nahum, and we come across other men's names that are strange to our ears, such as Mickel Trufry and Friend Collens.

A great many fanciful ways are used for inscribing samplers, the American child not being constant to the expression "Wrought by," so in vogue in Great Britain. Sarah Baker, 1811, uses the expression "marked her sampler"; Anna Brown says, "This I did in the year 1824"; Ruth Davis's sampler, 1817, was "performed in her eleventh year"—she was evidently a motherless child, as her verse runs:

"This work I did to let you see What care my Papy took of me."

One finds the expression, "Lydia Barcalow's sampler work"; also, "This completed." A sad, little faded specimen was begun by Mary Dealy, 1806, who died before its completion, a friend evidently finishing it for her, and adding this inscription:

"She was a blessing here below
The only child of a widow Subscribed by Sally Parker."

One very human inscription, showing that sampler makers did not always consider their tasks entirely congenial, is found on Patty Polk's work. She states: "Patty Polk did this and she hated every stitch she did in it. She loves to read much more." After all, the youngsters of those times were probably, at heart, pretty much as they are now, only terribly repressed, and this inscription opens a more intimate door than we usually happen upon. She has the letters G. W. inscribed on a tomb in the distance, and as the embroidery was done about 1800, these letters undoubtedly stood for the Father of our Country.

Occasionally we find the word "Exampler"; sometimes short didactic axioms are thrown in, such as "Imitate the Best"; "Sweet is the Counsel of a Friend"; "May Liberty, Peace, and Prosperity ever prevail in America".

A pleasing verse and one of the few that bears a sentiment most admirable for modern as well as bygone days, barring its spelling, is found on Ariadne Hackney's sampler made at Mercer, Virginia:

"Believe not each aspersion tongue
As most weak persons do
But still believe the story wrong
Which ought not to be true."

But this is venturing too far into the realm of the verses, and must be left for another chapter.

Elizabeth, the daughter of Captain Peter Harwood, sea captain and Revolutionary soldier, combines many unusual features on her sampler. The central part is a register, in which she makes use of rather unusual phraseology. She adds after her parents' names:

"They married Jan. 22nd, 1787,
He hath by her eleven children, viz:—"

and below are the names of the eleven. On either side she has tall, slender pedestals surmounted by a pair of celestial and terrestrial globes, such as were used in the schools of that period. Directly over the register is a very elaborate lambrequin, similar to those used over the tops of windows. The globes and the lambrequin foreshadowed the Victorian Era that was so soon to come. At the bottom, Elizabeth has a landscape. The largest house which she depicts was erected by her father, and was the first brick house built in North Brookfield, Massachusetts. A smaller building in the very corner represents a store, with its swinging sign near by.

In 1803, two little New York girls of eight and ten, named Caroline and Elizabeth Grimes, each worked a sampler and sent them across the ocean as gifts, to give pleasure to their English grandmother. Caroline, the younger, worked a quaint poem beginning, "The broad Atlantic rolls between fair England's Isle and me," and made perfectly lovely portraits of "Nero" the dog and "Tiger" the cat on the canvas. Elizabeth had a more ambitious huntsman and some didactic poetry headed LINES, in script capitals. This is not the only case in which such a piece of work was embroidered as a token of affection to be sent across this "Broad Atlantic," for in 1799 a sampler signed

"Hannah Wilson Bradford, Yorkshire, Old England to Phebe Speakman, Concord, North America"

was dispatched from the other side. If the address outside the package was equally vague, the postman of those days must have had clever brains to have enabled it to reach its destination. Still another instance of a sampler taking a long journey is that worked by Lydia Austin, a little Hindu girl. Though made in British India, it is a typical New England sampler, which leads us to the conclusion that she had a model from the New World to copy, and the deeply religious verse confirms the belief that she had been brought up as a Christian. We know that she was supported and educated by Miss Lydia Austin, who lived and died in New Haven, Connecticut, and who bestowed her name upon her little protégée. It was probably a token of gratitude sent to the benefactress.

Two specimens from Virginia indicate that a custom may have prevailed there of making samplers and giving them as betrothal or wedding presents to a relation or some particularly dear friend. One of these was made for a sister, and the design is rich with turtle doves, a wedding bell, and is marked "an emblem of love".

Still another one from Virginia is the handiwork of "Content Phillips, aged 12 October" (Plate lv). Her alphabets are inscribed on an unmistakable memorial tablet, but this does not interfere with her little dream of romance. For the urns at the four corners of her floral border contain rosebuds tied with true lovers' knots, while under the vines of the lower border the true lovers approach each other with arms outstretched. The antlered animal just between them in the picture, but evidently climbing a hillside, seems utterly oblivious of the proximity of the lovers. Content has succeeded in giving him a sublimely unbiased expression. This charming sampler is worked in bright colors on rich tan linen, and the outline of the tablet gives it distinction.

Many of the sampler makers were descendants or relatives of illustrious people, some of them American patriots, some English nobility. Two cousins of John Adams are on the list. Mary Ann Fenno had as ancestor Governor Thomas Dudley, of the Massachusetts Bay Colony; Sarah Jane Fletcher came of Mayflower stock; Jane Arthur was descended from James Dalrymple, Lord Stair of Scotland. Rebecca Old, born 1808, was the granddaughter of Elizabeth Stiegel and great-granddaughter of Henry William Stiegel, "Baron Stiegel," the pioneer Pennsylvania glass maker. The list of these notables could go on indefinitely.

In 1819, the great-great-great-granddaughter of "Marchant" Richard Dole, the builder of the first public wharf in Newburyport, embroidered a charming sampler, which is still cherished by the family. This little Sarah Dole (Plate lvi), aged nine, certainly did herself proud in her choice of soft and harmonious colors, perhaps having inherited this good taste from her mother. The story runs that when Washington visited Newburyport he was entertained at a house where the guest-chamber bed and windows were draped with a beautiful orange-yellow India print. In those days, neighbors and friends were often called in to assist and criticize the arrangements made for housing illustrious guests; and Sarah's mother, happening to see this room, found the effect so charming that she secured the pattern of the curtains, bought the goods in Newburyport, and reproduced them for her daughter's bed when she was married in 1831. Sarah's sampler still hangs in the room adorned by these draperies, and the sprightly bird which she embroidered in the lower left-hand corner, while keeping a watchful eye on a stag facing him from the further side of a basket of flowers, has an air of casting an occasional wink across the room at these cheerful-looking curtains, as much as to say, "You and I are in very good taste, are we not?"

PLATE XXXIII

Caroline Maria Welch, the maker of a sampler in 1827, was the descendant of John Welch, the carver of the sacred Codfish so much revered by all Bostonians, which once occupied the proud position of weathervane. It is now preserved in the museum inside of the old State House. This disposes of the story that it fell from Heaven into the Frog Pond.

It gives one real pleasure to find family samplers, long separated by the breaking up of homes, brought together again at last between the covers of this book. This is the case with the work of the Rine sisters, probably Pennsylvania Dutch, who both attended Mrs. Armstrong's school at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, where they did the embroidery. Fanny, having rather the best of it, was twelve years old, while Wilamina had to struggle through hers at the tender age of six. No wonder that the younger child's flowers and vines are a bit clumsier in workmanship.

We know that the Pennsylvania Dutch, as the early German settlers of that region were called, produced many samplers, for the children's names betray their Teutonic origin. Their fathers and mothers must have inspired or exacted awe, for the children often

"Respectfully present" the finished product to their parents. A certain sort of weeping willow must have been indigenous to that part of the country, as it frequently appears on these samplers. Sarah Yeakel (Plate lvii), 1806, shows one growing beside her hilltop house, evidently buffeted by a strong easterly wind. A velvety lawn in different shades of green sweeps down to the bottom of the hill, where some sheep are browsing in the shade of a large tree, while in the distance others are seen. But unfortunately the perspective fails here and the meadow stops at the nearer sheep, leaving the others suspended in mid-air. Near the house, a thoroughly English peacock suns himself—a rather unusual variety, however, boasting only eight large feathers to his tail.

Poplar trees, owing to their contour, always lend themselves well to embroidery; but Anna Sophia Beckwith (Plate lviii), 1829, makes it distinctly understood that her farmhouse stood in a "Poplar Grove", and has labeled it accordingly. It conveys the impression that farmers of that day understood the art of placing their houses happily, for although in a valley it looks well swept by breezes, and the dark shutters tightly closed seem calculated to keep out the heat.

Nancy Platt (Plate lix), 1804, presumably lived in a house on a terrace, above a row of poplars. Whether or not she moved, later on, to the home of many windows pictured below the terraced one, outdoor life was evidently to her taste, for we find a cow and a dog of almost equal size; and can it be Herself on horseback?

Another pair of sisters reunited in these pages are Betty and Sally Brierly. They each cut a generous piece of pale blue linen as a ground-work—a departure from the usual white or cream color—which very possibly may have been spun, woven, and dyed in their home, not an unusual task and sometimes done by the maker of the sampler. Both girls were inspired by English ideals, especially Betty (Plate lx), as her chief ornament is "A Representation of the Temple of Solomon or the House of the Lord", a curiously thin-walled edifice which frequently appears on English samplers, but which is rarely seen on those made in this country. Betty's five fruit trees below are very ornamental, and her "Evening Meditation on the Crucification", though serious, is a less lugubrious poem than we usually find. Sally Brierly, two years later, copied her sister's complicated strawberry border and also some of the detached roses, but contented herself with a much smaller and more practical church, which, strange to say, appears unmistakably in an earlier sampler by Sarah Bancroft. How interesting it would be if we could identify it!

Still another child of this period, Faith Walker (Plate lxi), erects a Solomon's Temple on her sampler, but makes up for the absence of the usual court by an ornamental fence with arched gateways. It does not appear that either child tried to follow very clearly the description given in the Bible. Below is a most original representation of Adam and Eve, the latter overshadowed by a huge rooster, and the "grand old gardener and his wife" both sadly in need, not only of clothes, but also of a course in physical culture. Those spindle shanks must have made the journey out of Eden very arduous.

The same couple are much more fully clothed in Elizabeth Rowe Terry's handiwork; as a matter of fact, she goes to the other extreme and has dressed them in the fashion of 1828. Fortunately, as the serpent has been omitted, they are labeled, so one is saved from the error of mistaking them for Elizabeth's relations. Eve's train is very stiff and heavy, as if whaleboned. Adam shows no enthusiasm for the proffered apple.

In the nineteenth century, however, our first parents are not often depicted. They evidently did not appeal to our little countrywomen's taste for original design, though it is amusing to note a decided lack of originality in two samplers of 1820, worked by sisters, Abigail and Mary Harding. They are precisely alike; perhaps the younger girl tried to emulate her sister in everything, as little sisters are apt to do. The Reding sisters, Mary A. and Harriet Biron, embroidered pictures of the same house and distant landscape, simply viewed from a different angle. Another copy was the sampler of Phebe Esther Copp, 1822, which was almost a facsimile of that of her grandmother and namesake, Esther Copp, worked in 1765.

Not only temples and churches, but all sorts of public buildings are found on the samplers of this century. The architecture was frequently curiously modified to suit the whim of the maker or to meet the exigencies of embroidery, but we must not be too critical so long as these scenes bear a sufficient resemblance to the original or are labeled. Unfortunately this is often not the case, and many imposing buildings depicted may be real structures and not merely flights of fancy, although, alas, they cannot now be identified. The earliest samplers of this kind show the public buildings at Providence, Rhode Island, and for those, undoubtedly, our thanks are due to old "Marm" Balch's Select Female Academy, a description of which will be found in the chapter on schools.

On many of these samplers stand the old State House and the buildings of Brown University; some ambitious children combine the two. The First Congregational Church of Providence also proved popular. Sarah F. Sweet has embroidered it with great attention to detail and with the inscription that it was destroyed by fire on June 14, 1814. On another unsigned piece of work we see the same church, minus the towers. The child undoubtedly meant to add them, but my theory is that she started to use too many alphabets above, and realizing when she reached R that she had encroached too far on the space required, she stopped short in discouragement, leaving a long, loose end of silk running down and then upward through the linen, to prevent it from tangling. (See Plate lxii.)

A still more ambitious undertaking is that of Maria Hopping, who essayed the First Baptist Church of Providence. We should be devoutly thankful that this church in real life did not share the fate of its Congregational brother, for in its lovely setting of green it still remains, a delight to the eye. She has erected a rather ungainly arch over the church, with curious bases and capitals, in the nature of some of the Family Record arches or those used in the Balch school samplers, only less graceful.

Another sampler (Plate lxiii) bearing many names, but with that of Saunders predominating, shows the building of the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Virginia. This college shares with Harvard the honor of being a pioneer institution of learning in this country, and dates back to 1681, though it did not receive its charter till 1693. Many illustrious men received their education in this historic place. Their parents may have especially approved of sending their sons to a college whose rules forbade any student keeping a race horse, and ordered that drinking be confined to the moderation that becomes a prudent and industrious student. It is truly appropriate that this college should appear as chief ornament on a piece of needlework, for one of the officials appointed in 1761 was a stocking mender, who received the munificent salary of twelve pounds a year. The buildings are pictured as standing on the banks of a river or lake, upon which float several boats. This must be taken as poetic license, as both the York and James Rivers are some miles away.

The "Old Brick Row" of Yale University, which was the chief feature of the college until about thirty years ago, when all but Connecticut Hall was demolished, is to be found on a most interesting sampler by Emily Clark (Plate lxiv). The whole scene, though so tiny, is unmistakable, for every building is there, as well as some of the elms which in those days overshadowed them. As the colors are beautifully harmonious and the stitchery quite wonderful, this is a specimen which leaves very little to be desired.

"Princeton College" (Plate lxv) is the imposing label at the top of an early nineteenth century sampler. But what a different scene from the Princeton we now know! If the child meant to show Nassau Hall, Princeton's oldest building, she altered the architecture very materially. Whatever building is represented is probably still standing, but at present we cannot discover its identity.

Sally Whittington, who lived at Annapolis, chose St. Ann's Church, a notable bit of early architecture, as the chief ornament of her work made in 1819; and the New York City Hall proved equally decorative as embroidered by Elizabeth Jane Hamil (Plate lxvi) in 1828, with the tall trees on either hand and the charmingly shaded lawn in the foreground—a far cry, indeed, to the same building in the midst of the seething business crowds of today.

Independence Hall, in Philadelphia, birthplace of our Declaration of Independence, lends great dignity to Ann Macomber's (Plate xli) work, 1799, and below it, with only half of the building on the canvas, she gives us a glimpse of Carpenter's Hall, where our First Congress met. As the two views stand alone, without border or alphabet, this sampler has a rather unusual appearance.

Eliza F. Budd (Plate lxvii), 1808, crowned a delightful hillside landscape with the courthouse of Mount Holly, New Jersey. There is some effort at perspective in the broad path leading up to the building on the hill, planted with trees alternating in shape, and with one neat tree on each step of the terrace. There, strange to say, David guards his sheep on one side of the slope and Ruth gleans on the other; though why these Biblical characters should appear in the vicinity of Mount Holly, history does not tell.

This form of sampler, where a building stands directly in the center on a hilltop, with trees or jardinières outlining the slope on either side, is quite characteristic of the period. Sometimes the building looks like a castle or church, sometimes a more humble, homelike structure. A group, consisting of a man and woman and strange varieties of domestic animals, generally occupies the foreground. Little "E. T.'s" sampler man looks as if he had donned an Indian suit and headdress for the occasion. He is shown offering a flower to a lady.

Julia Ann Nivers tastefully arranged on her canvas all the public buildings of the main street of Crawford, New Hampshire, and added a long poem entitled "The Young and Giddy", and in smaller letters, "Invited to Christ". (See tailpiece, p. 254.)

Palmyra M. Keen gives us a large church, a schoolhouse, and two other buildings; not in a row, as in a village street, but detached, with a grapevine wandering between. Sophia Stevens Smith (Plate lxviii), 1818, shows the white church at North Branford, Connecticut, a near-by red farmhouse, and a bridge over which an imposing coach is passing. The whole scene, well composed and crowned by a graceful garland of flowers and bowknots, was easily recognizable until a few years ago, when the church was burned to the ground.

Though beyond the period dealt with in this book, it is interesting to note that by 1839 the custom of sampler making had penetrated as far west as Missouri, for a child from Brunswick, in that state, embroidered one with a picture of the "Methodist Episcopal Church."

Two varieties of sampler, much in vogue in England at the period of which I write, never became popular in our country. I refer to those showing the darning stitches and to the embroidered maps. The Dutch were probably the originators of the darned samplers, those fine pieces of work where squares of the linen groundwork are cut out and the holes filled in with different damask patterns worked in contrasting shades of silk; where "barn door" and "winklehawk" tears, purposely made, are darned so as to be almost invisible unless a colored thread is used. The English embellished this work of "stoppage" still further by using baskets or bunches of flowers as a central ornament, with a different darning-stitch in each flower and leaf. For some unknown reason, very little of this work was produced here. It is distressing to reflect that even at this early period our national sin of extravagance betrayed itself in our failure to train the young in the art of repairing and conserving.

One of the happy exceptions is the work of Julia Boudinot (Plate cxvi), 1800. It is a real darned sampler, giving about thirty different designs of darned damask-stitch, the colored silk threads running only in one direction, and the pattern made by picking up the threads of the groundwork which has not been cut away. This resembles the only French darned sampler which has been brought to my notice, so one is not surprised to learn that the Boudinots were French Huguenots. They lived in Newark, New Jersey, and when Julia's sister married a Baltimorian she was one of the six bridesmaids who accompanied the happy pair to their home in Baltimore, where they all spent a most delightful winter, society being especially gay that season, because of the visit of Jerome Bonaparte and his officers.

The charming Northern girls were evidently a great success, for the story of their merry pranks and many festivities is still remembered by their descendants.

Mary Gill (Plate lxi), of Wilmington, Delaware, 1814, made a similar sampler, but she used white cotton and only made six squares, filling the seventh square in the center with a sort of knitting-stitch, such as could be used for repairing stockings. Hannah Bennet, of Hubbardston, 1800, in addition to a panel in which three boats are being rowed up hill, worked a border across the bottom with some damask patterns, but, following Mary Gill's example, the groundwork is not cut out and the threads run only one way.

It is easier to understand the rarity of our map samplers, as an embroidered map of our whole country would, indeed, be an undertaking. The English children turned out maps of "England, Scotland and Wales" by the dozen, some of which are interesting because of the originality of the geography, embellishments in the way of pretty boats or ships in the surrounding waters, or a figure of Britannia in the corner, guarding a coat of arms. Some are so exact in design as to recall the fact that they were sometimes printed on silk and could be bought in shops ready to embroider, with an inscription such as "A New Map of Scotland for Ladies Needlework, 1797". Mr. Huish, in his book, gives an illustration of a Map of North America made in 1738, but implies that it was an English production. It is amusing as an example of the general conception of our country at that time, the "parts unknown" occupying a very large area.

Only about a dozen maps of American origin have come to light, among them the State of New Jersey; the State of Maryland, by Elizabeth Susannah Bowie; and also one of Massachusetts, by Elizabeth Stevens (Plate cv), made in Public School No. 13 in New York.

Elizabeth Ann Goldin (Plate lxx) exercised her utmost skill, which was considerable, on a map of the State of New York; not only is her stitching wonderful—it is hard to guess how she procured silk fine enough for the curls and tendrils that ornament her capitals—but she had a turn for statistics and gives valuable information, namely, that the population of New York State in 1829 was 1,392,812 and that "Long Island is the most important Island belonging to the State of New York, 140 miles in length and from 10 to 15 broad, contains three counties and numerous flourishing towns, population 87,000". She gives also this bit of history: "Lake Erie is the celebrated scene of Perry's victory over a British fleet, September 10th, 1813", and "Lake Champlain is celebrated for the victory gained by Macdonough over a British fleet of far superior force, September, 1814". So many of our little sampler makers seemed to have died in early life that it is refreshing to know that Elizabeth Ann lived to a ripe old age and is buried in the cemetery at Watkins Glen, New York.

Betsy Scott made a very large, clear map of England and Wales, and we have also a very pretty little "New Map of France" embroidered by a small American child. But the most original of all is the map of North and South America, by Frances Wade (Plate lxxi). 1798, for the "Great War" has not played such havoc with the map of Europe as did the little needlewoman with the countries of our hemisphere. Chili and Patagonia have changed places; the "Amazon country" occupies a big section of Brazil; Florida is more than half as large as the portion marked "United States"; New Mexico is even larger, and Louisiana is tucked in snugly above, right in the heart of the Continent; while Canada, a detached section toward the top of the map, does not touch the United States at all. Altogether it would be difficult to find a more unusual conception of the Western Hemisphere, and one wonders if it was due to a vivid imagination or to ignorance on the part of her instructors.

Two less imaginative but even more courageous children actually embroidered charts of the world, one of them being an ambitious affair, embellished at the corners with allegorical figures of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. (See Plate xxi.)

I imagine that many of these samplers took many years to work, and in most cases one such effort was considered sufficient to establish a reputation for proficiency in needlework; but cases have been found where one child made two samplers in one year, or two a year or so apart. Mary Hatch, in 1808, set an example in industry by embroidering a sampler and in the same year completing a most elaborate pen-and-ink drawing of the State of New York, the counties being outlined, the rivers and even the turnpikes traced; altogether a most laborious task.

Here and there we find a child incorporating useful bits of information from other branches of learning on her work, such as the "Boundaries of the State of Connecticut" on Lucy Ann Johnson's sampler, 1822, and Frances Parker's multiplication table done at Piny Grove, Charles City County, Virginia, in 1800. Frances did not waste any time on ornamentation, not even as much as did the earlier arithmetical sampler maker mentioned in a previous chapter, but contented herself with marking off the squares in plain cross-stitch and placing a numeral in each.

It was not until the nineteenth century was well on its way that the American Eagle took his place in embroidery as an emblem of patriotism, and even then his appearance is so rare as greatly to enhance the value of any specimen on which he is found. His rarity, however, is less surprising when we reflect that on all the thousands of English samplers we see, the British Lion is generally conspicuous by his absence.

South Carolina contributes the first of the species in a truly patriotic form, for the pennant in the eagle's beak is inscribed with the word "Independence" and he is surrounded by stars. On those of Sarah S. Caldwell, 1806, and Ann Eliza Eyre, 1829, he is suspended in the sky above a rural landscape, his wings outspread and the shield upon his breast. (See Plate lxxii.)

Mary Hallowell, at the very end of this period, made her eagle look so singularly like a dove of peace—even giving him an olive branch to carry—that it requires the surrounding stars and a study of ornithology to identify him positively. However, in those peaceful days he could afford to cultivate this resemblance. Margaret Moss (Plate lxxiii), 1825, makes him resplendent; bearing two American flags in his claws and an E pluribus unum streamer in his beak. He hovers over an animated scene, in which we see a red house, sheep and shepherd, cows and beehive (around which the bees fly most symmetrically), while the father and mother stroll in the sunshine, watching their three children at play. In a wreath in the upper corner, supported by cherubs clad in dark undershirts, Margaret's name and the date of her work are recorded; and in the pendant the death date, presumably of a grandmother, aged eighty. This sampler came from the vicinity of Philadelphia, and the house is said to represent William Penn's little brick home which stands in Fairmount Park. To be sure, it is a story higher than the original, but that is an unimportant detail. Can it be that the male figure is intended for William himself? It would not be an anachronism to have his wife gayly clad, as she was not a Quakeress.

Another heraldic animal, a cross between a dog and a lion, and wearing a crown, a frequent figure on English work, peeps out from the corner of Emmeline Ivins's attractive house at Mechanics Town. A crown is another Tory emblem, which is rare in this country, and usually indicates an English origin.

Lucy P. Wyman, 1810, uses the aces of hearts, diamonds, clubs, and spades in her design, which strikes one as rather odd in a day when cards were usually taboo in a respectable community.

Other bits of design characteristic of European countries often crop out in American samplers in most unexpected places and apparently without reason, such as the spies bearing the grapes of Eschol or the gnarled pear trees on one of the Brierly samplers, both of which patterns might have been transplanted from the Dutch samplers, where they were favorites. The "West Town" School, near Philadelphia, and "Nine Partners" School, near New York, frequently used the geometric figures characteristic of those from the Vierlande, in Northern Germany. Still others, composed entirely of detached motives—baskets of flowers, wreaths, etc.—need only the addition of a broken column or two, and a Temple of Love or a grotto, to make them resemble the rare early French samplers covered with patterns to be used on embroidered waistcoats.

Early in the last century, the custom arose of making samplers serve the double purpose of decorative needlework and a record of the family births, marriages, and deaths. This idea, in its simplest form, originated perhaps fifty years before, but was never fully developed till later, when it gained rapidly in favor and very many were made. They are generally inscribed, "Genealogy", "Family Register", or "Family Record" (in one case spelled Rechord), and seem to have been a purely American specialty. Many of the records are simply worked on straight lines in cross-stitch, with only a narrow border for decoration—very dull affairs except for the immediate descendants, or where there is some historical interest attached, as in the sampler of Sophia Smith, the founder of Smith College.

Another type manages to be decorative as well as genealogical, for many of them have architectural pillars at the sides and an arch over the top, frequently beautified with garlands of flowers. Dorcas A. Kelly, who was born and lived at Mendon (called Men on the sampler), Massachusetts, and also Betsy Cleveland, inscribed on their floral arches, "Keep sacred the memory of thy Ancestors". On several others, one of them the Loring Family Record (Plate lxxiv), the following lines are found carefully stitched in the lower corners:

The duty
of parents in bringing up their children is great and important no one will deny that good example set before children will induce them to follow the like example and may lay a foundation for their usefulness in the world and a blessing to their parents.

The duty of children towards parents is equally great and important the great god of heaven and earth has given a command to children to honour their parents that their days may be long upon the land children would do well to observe this great commandment.

* * *

One can imagine that enumerating the duties of parents to their children was a far more congenial as well as important task to the childish mind than the dry recital of their duties to their parents. Usually these genealogies only give the names of two generations, those of the parents and children, but occasionally the grandparents' names also appear.

PLATE XXXVIII

ZEBIAH GORE'S SAMPLER. Boston. 1791
Owned by Miss Mary H. Leeds

Harriet Van Wart, in 1822, at the age of thirteen, embroidered a most elaborate Family Record, thirty inches square. It would seem almost the work of a lifetime, as she gives the names of her grandparents, both paternal and maternal, her parents, also those of her thirteen brothers and sisters, with dates of birth and deaths, all of these without abbreviation. Chain-stitching in human hair separates the groups of genealogical data.

Second and third marriages seem to have been very general, and the children bestowed equal care in recording the names of mother and stepmother. Eliza Ann Hunt, in 1824, does this in a pretty way by entwining three hearts. The upper left-hand heart is devoted to the father's name and date of birth; the upper right-hand heart has one lobe assigned to the mother, the other to the stepmother; while the lower inverted heart gives the two marriages, one on each lobe. In addition to the genealogy, this sampler shows an unusually tall house of four stories, surrounded by spacious grounds and lofty trees.

Jane E. Blatchford, 1814, records the birth of seventeen children between the dates of December, 1788, and March, 1811. With so many brothers and sisters, one would think that she, as well as the mother, would have had their hands too full to embark on such a piece of needlework. In our utilitarian age, we do not attempt elaborate phraseology; but a century ago, parents were "United in Marriage" or "Departed this Life", and children occasionally listed under the head of "Progeny", with little economic regard for the number of stitches.

One of the earliest and handsomest of these family registers is that made in 1802 by Harriet Jones (Plate lxxv), the daughter of William Jones, governor of Rhode Island from 1811 to 1817, a man who could boast of a varied career previous to that time. During the Revolution, he first held a commission in Babcock's regiment, then became Captain of Marines on the frigate Providence, and was afterwards the bearer of dispatches to Benjamin Franklin in Paris and the first delegate from the United States to be received at the French court. The record is a pathetic one, because of the fact that of his six children only two survived. Four little urns in a row surmount a tomb on which their names are inscribed, with this verse below the dates of their deaths:

"These tender blossoms of the opening year, Secure from harms still claim a parents' tear."

Another sampler records the birth of a still-born child. It is sad to find how great was the mortality among the young children of large families. From Geneva, New York, comes the cry of poor little Catherine Meach, who in 1824 bewails the loss of four small brothers and sisters "all removed from this world in the course of five months"; she adds, "This little tribute of affection is recorded by a sister who deeply mourns their loss".

In many of these genealogies, below the lines of names and dates, willow trees are to be seen shading elaborate monuments, inscribed with the names or simply the initials of departed members of the family. These closely resemble the tombs so often found on the embroidered pictures of the period, or recall the designs of the mourning rings and brooches which were so popular with our ancestors. Little Betsy Cook may have been naturally of a gloomy disposition, or perhaps was depressed by the verse she embroidered, so common on samplers:

"This work in hand my friends may have,
When I am dead and laid in grave."

In either case, she was feeling pretty pessimistic about her future when she placed a little tomb, surmounted by an urn, under the usual willow tree, and carefully labelled it "Miss B.C." Ruthy Trufry, of Portland, 1807, embroidered a row of little tombstones under her weeping willows, all ready for the inscriptions should any one of the family pass away. But only one stone, bearing the parents' initials, evidently was needed in her lifetime. Poor little Ruthy had a hard time with the corners of her rather unusual border and, after all, failed to make the ends of the vine meet at the bottom. Mary A. Gale, 1825, beautified her symmetrical record by placing a tiny wreath of flowers about each name and date. The little Sawyer girl evolved a rather ingenious idea for working in a little genealogical information. She makes a border of elongated, interlacing wreaths, in which she places the births of her brothers and sisters. Her name and date, done in black, have gone the way of most of the black silk of those days, which was dyed in iron rust and disintegrated sooner than the colored threads. Charlot Chadwick recorded the birth of a little brother in slightly different colored silk (probably her silk had given out), just after she had finished the sampler. One finds, frequently, that deaths have been added to the records years after their original completion.

PLATE XXXIX

In a few instances, the records take the form of a real tree, with the names inscribed on the pendant fruit, such as Lydia Russell's tree, 1809, which grows in a meadow surrounded by an elaborate landscape, and flanked by two large pedestals or tombs on either side, bearing the parents' names and supporting jardinières, from which admirably trained rose vines wander to the top of the sampler, where, in a thoroughly Lord Lovell and Lady Nancy Bell manner, "they entwine in a true lover's knot for all lovers true (of samplers) to admire—mire—mire". Lydia's apples, as well as the names thereon, are painted.

Lucy Wyman (Plate lxxvi), 1807, kept strictly to embroidery. Her tree springs from entwined hearts bearing her parents' names, and she provides for such a contingency as the arrival of a baby brother or sister by supplying an upper branch with one extra apple, left blank. Another quaint and somewhat lugubrious tree has branches bearing portrait heads of the different members of the family instead of fruit.

The Rice family genealogy, and that embroidered by Eliza F. Parker, 1818, can be mentioned in the same category. The former is on dark linen, and the tree grows poetically out of two hearts that form a sort of jardinière. The latter has some delightful shading on the wiggly tree trunk. One wishes that the records more often took this truly decorative form.

Finally, there is a type of register where the genealogical data (generally rather brief) is squeezed into some vacant corner, occasionally seeming the result of an after-thought, as in the work of Elizabeth McIntire, 1807, where the names and dates crowd a pastoral scene, in which we see cows grazing under a double row of trees on the banks of a canal or river, with a row of houses on the farther side. (See Plate lxxvii.)

The record of the Lamborn family (undated), formerly in Mr. Alexander Drake's collection, is of this same type, and very elaborate and beautiful. A large jardinière filled with flowers stands on the top of a grassy knoll, while three white lambs reposing in the foreground seem rather overawed by the size of the flowers growing in the meadow about them, the whole being gracefully bordered with flowers at the sides and a grape vine winding across the top.

Considering that so much of this American needlework came from states bordering on the Atlantic, it is astonishing that ships and boats did not figure more often in the designs. We occasionally see them in distant views, but rarely with such fine effect as on Susan Munson's skillful work, 1824. Her unique contribution is the good ship Potosi, in black with white sails, American flag and ensign, on a light green sea. Behind it she shows a blue and white sky, with a rainbow, moon, and star. She has placed the ship in the center of the sampler, and on either side of it the words:

From Rocks
Shoals and Stormy Weather
A Rainbow at night

O God
Protect the Potosi
ever.
Is a Sailors delight. (See Plate lxxxii.)

As we have seen, the samplers of the nineteenth century were used for all sorts of purposes and to commemorate many different events, having traveled far from their original purpose of simply preserving valuable patterns in convenient form. Sarah Hillhouse, 1810, chose a long poem entitled "The Hermit" as the pièce de résistance of her work, one utterly devoid of interest to a child. Let us hope she did not realize how dull the poem was. Another sampler, depicting a rural scene, eulogizes Washington:

PLATE XL

LOANN SMITH'S SAMPLER. Providence, 1785

Done at Miss Polly Balch's School

Owned by the Rhode Island School of Design

"Mourn Hapless Brethern Deeply mourn,
The source of every joy is fled.
Our Father dear, the Friend of Man,
The Godlike Washington is dead."

It was made by Eliza Thomas, in 1804, but probably was begun nearer the time of Washington's death. Still another one of much later date commemorates the death of McPherson, with a poem of seventeen lines bidding "Columbia mourn".

Hannah J. Robinson (Plate lxxviii), 1818, embroidered what we might call a missionary sampler, in which "every prospect pleases", man, fortunately, being omitted. An eagle perches upon a tablet inscribed with a verse, "The Spread of the Gospel"; flowering vines on either side entwine around tall stakes, making a novel border, the whole surrounded by a solid black band of cross-stitch, on which is Hannah's name in white. This border resembles the black mats painted on glass and edged with gold, so often used in framing old prints and memorial pictures.

In 1821, Lucinda Brooks's sampler took the form of an embroidered Marriage Certificate of herself, aged sixteen, and Ruben Dade, aged twenty-two, on one side, and on the other these words:

"May the cares that bind the covetous never disturb our peace.
May we yield therefore one to the other and be equally yoked together in the command of God. May neither of us seek basely to through an undue weight on the other's shoulders. Suffer no interference from any other to interrupt our harmony. We are connected for life, nothing can separate our fate in this world. Oh, let nothing divide our affections. May we regard each other with the fullest confidence, the least spark of suspicion from either might forever blast the comfort of both. There can be no harmony where there is no faith."

Sixteen seems a very early age to commit matrimony, but we find that Elizabeth Floyd, also a sampler maker, was married at Smithtown, Long Island, at the age of fifteen.

A curious effusion is found on the handiwork of Catherine Snyder, of Clarkstown, New York, made in 1800. It reads:

"DIALOGUE"

Men	"Tell us O Woman, we would know Whither so fast we move
Women	We called to leave the World below Are seeking one above
Men	Whence came ye, sa—"

There it ends, unfortunately, as we would greatly enjoy knowing whence they came.

A romantic interest attaches itself to the three samplers made by a son and two daughters of the Gauffreau family (Plate lxxix), who immigrated to New York from St. Barthelemey, one of the Leeward Islands, in 1815. The oldest girl lived to be eighty-seven, and her account of the family's terrible experiences in San Domingo, handed down from her mother, is still remembered. During the slave insurrection of 1791, the members of the family had a narrow escape, having been saved by a faithful slave, who hid them in an abandoned chicken house and then conducted them by night to the coast, whence they fled to Philadelphia. All these sampler inscriptions are in French, and, indeed, the one embroidered by the boy Fortuné was made before coming to this country, and is therefore not strictly American. It is interesting as being the only one of this period made by a boy, although boys' samplers are sometimes found in Europe and Mexico. The girls, Louisa and Celestine, dated theirs from New York. Louisa seems to have been especially fond of her mother, for she dedicated her work to "Ma Mère" and accompanied it with some pretty verses and emblems of affection.

Speaking of boys' samplers, the signature of a boy, George Terrell, is found with her name on the work of Margareta Whann, but one cannot tell whether or not he helped with the embroidery. Possibly he furnished the design, but if so he was not a very skillful draughtsman, for the vine border wanders aimlessly about and the central oval containing the house and landscape is oddly irregular. We forget, however, these shortcomings in the charm of the coloring of the grass, the trees, and the pretty draperies above, held back by little cords and tassels. This feature, i. e., the draperies, is generally reserved for the sampler scenes where it is desired to indicate that the action takes place indoors. We see it on a choice English sampler of 1767, around a group of charming ladies clad in stump-work dresses, with real lace fichus and headdresses, who are sweeping their voluminous trains across a tessellated floor, as though on their way to a repast. In this case the curtains are also in stump-work. Though never used in as elaborate a way, the American samplers made at Providence quite often resort to this effect, as in the President's Inaugural Reception shown on Nancy Hall's (Plate xcix) sampler.

Among other unusual touches that add interest to different samplers we may mention the coach and four horses on Priscilla Ward's; Melissa Marsh's collection of sampler stitches; a branch of autumn leaves lending a note of color to the background of Sally Oliver's work; the hemstitching and fringing done by Nancy Merrill, and bands of openwork on some others.

Several unusual samplers of a very distinctive type have come to light, consisting of a groundwork of white net, without any border, on which are patterns of needle-run lace, such as was in vogue about 1825 (Plate lxix). One of these samplers, which is in the Philadelphia Museum, though unsigned, has a piece of paper sewed to the net on which a name is written. It would be interesting to know more about these samplers, but very little information is forthcoming. We have to content ourselves with believing that the facts point to their probably being of American production some time between 1820 and 1830.

Having touched on most of the varieties to be seen in the examples of the nineteenth century, one comes to what is perhaps the most attractive type, the design which shows the little girl's own home. Such is the sampler of Sophia Cutter, 1801, where a particularly cosy farmhouse nestles against a hillside shaded by a fine tree, enlivened by three large birds perching near by, all seeming to indicate a happy home in the country; the effect only marred by a dreadfully gloomy verse, which "like a worm i' the bud preys on" the peaceful scene.

Usually the little needlewomen were not ultra-realistic, but allowed a playful fancy to improve upon every-day life; especially on the sampler lawns do we meet most delightful, unusual things. There gigantic strawberries grow in orderly rows; beside them graze many strange animals, such as antlered dogs and sheep; sometimes two white horses make a meal of strawberries. Perhaps a gentleman advances across the lawn, hat in hand, to greet a lady with a fan, or a man is seen fishing from a pond set in the midst of the grass, but all has a charming air of "make-believe"; and it is only occasionally that we come upon a scene such as Polly Parker, of Bradford, embroidered in 1802, which is truly pastoral, and more like the "petit-point" pictures of a far earlier period. In this sampler, the shepherd's expression as he pipes to his lady-love, seated in a bosky dell, is almost too sweet to be borne, and we, as well as the sheep dog, share her embarrassment. We often find incongruities in color as well as in perspective and proportion. A lovely border of pink roses admirably shaded in natural colors will suddenly break out into a bright blue rose at the top. Did the child weary of pink, and take liberties in the absence of her mother or teacher; or had she, perhaps, heard of the legend that a blue rose means happiness or love—or, at least, something pleasant to dream of?

Mary Ann Fessenden Vinton (Plate lxxx), 1814, makes her work as nearly like a memorial picture as possible, and yet keeps it a true sampler, and has cleverly arranged the alphabet and numerals in different styles, so as to form a narrow inner border around the tomb and the weeping female, the ornate rose border being quite different in character from the earlier conventionalized pattern. Olive E. Hewins, of Boston, 1829, has done very much the same thing, except that there is no note of sadness about her wide-awake young lady, clad in the dress and coiffure of the period, and the landscape is enriched with chenille. Elizabeth Williams, of Baltimore, uses a similar border, and depicts a very spacious Colonial house set in a lawn, across which the sun casts shadows that are lovely in coloring. The proverbial Southern hospitality had its influence on the young sampler makers, and nearly all of their productions show generous-sized mansions, capable of housing many guests. Eliza Picket's (Plate lxxxi) canvas has given us a particularly spacious house of this type, with wings on either side; in fact, it is so large that she has not left room for anything else except a rose border and her name and age, even the date being omitted.

Aimena Sherman shows an amusing scene. The imposing house does not take up as much room on the sampler as usual (some of its shutters are invitingly open, showing pretty curtains, while other windows are tightly closed), so there is space for ample grounds, with a barn at one side, a long stretch of fence and a road in front, where a procession is passing. We see a man leading a horse and driving three cows, a nurse pulling a very archaic baby carriage, a laborer going to work, and a woman leading a dog, all combining to make an animated scene, the proportions throughout being surprisingly good.

But of these pictured houses, the one above all others in which I would choose to live is that created by Hannah Kibbes, 1806. It is embroidered on dark green tammy, which gives a mellow, warm tone. The house, viewed from a slight angle, is approached by a winding path leading up to the door, on which hangs an engaging knocker. On one side, an arbor, shaded by a sturdy grape vine, forming the border across the top of the sampler; on the other, a well, with hanging bucket, offers refreshment—how many pleasant days could be spent in such a spot! To be sure, the well is very near the house, and in real life might be infected with typhoid and other noxious germs; but sampler-land has its advantages—disagreeable things simply do not exist. The poets of this happy country are, one must confess, a rather gloomy band, but no doubt their morbid lines have but little effect on the peaceful atmosphere of the embroidered scenes, where large families can live happily in small houses, where flowers never fade, where there is always leisure and every one looks happy. If laborers rest on their rakes it does not trouble us, as the crops are never spoiled; the sunny summer afternoon is just comfortable for sitting out of doors in pretty clothes; though flies and insects sometimes assume large proportions, they never molest. Long live this happy sampler-land, a delightful refuge for the imagination in times of stress and worry!

Soon after 1830, a general deterioration may be noticed in both the quality of workmanship and the number of samplers produced; perhaps the demand for a slightly wider education for girls may have led them to devote less time and care to the art of needlework; but more probably it was due to the craze for Berlin wool-work, with its garish colors, coarse cross-stitch, and banal designs, which spread across the ocean, the mothers and teachers thinking the new patterns and methods more modish, and wishing their daughters to be up-to-date. Whatever the cause, the custom gradually died out, and so ended the most prolific and characteristic period of American samplers.

EVENING MEDITATION, ON THE CRUCIFIXION BETTY BRIERLEY Work 1826

MY Lord my Saviour died, For guilty sinners sake: The tokens of his love O! keep mine eyes awake. I cannot close but no
That He should suffer us And yet it is the source Whence all my comfort flows: I cannot chide but mourn, Whence sin made men
To bleed, And yet such worthiness My soul from death hath freed. 'Twas not the treacherous Jew That did my Lord betray
It was himself, More treacherous far than they: 'Twas not the soldier's spear That pierc'd my Saviour's side. 'Twas my Envy, My unbelief, my pride. There were the bloody thorns That did his temples wound, And guard those sacred drops
That did bedew the ground. And when his Father's wrath Drew forth that bitter cry, He yielded up his life For rebels such as I.
And can I chide but mourn, When dies and rocks did rend, And Nature wept her face. At sight of such an end, But haste
My soul to view Thy happiness restored, And death and hell subdued By thy triumphant Lord Put off thy mourning weed.
Thy Jews reign on high, Receiving gifts for men, For rebels such as I: Betty Brierley Work Aged 18 Years 1826

From "Samplers" and "Chippings" an old writer of the Journal of the American Society, said the designs were "Collected with much pains by

From scorching Spain and fiery M.

From fertile France and pleasant Italy.

From Poland, Sweden, Denmark, Germany,

And some of the rarest patterns have been

Beyond the boundless of Father's M.

From spacious China and those Kingdoms

And from great Mexico, the Indies West.

Thus are these works fairly brought and brought,

And consequently good for ladies' tongues.

In every respect the seventeenth century seems to have been the golden age of the sampler.

We must take a little space to note some of the verses which are striking indications of what was held to be the proper training of children. In Life Ann French brodered these lines:

The sampler work may finish your life,
When I am old and old in gray.

A child of even worked wonderfully well in her needle.

From the sampler
the child may learn
the value of the needle.

From the sampler
the child may learn

very elaborate. Not only are there initials and signatures, besides the alphabets, but figures of Adam and Eve, borders, figures of flowers, animals and horses, and small human figures of a peculiar shape, which sampler-wise people call "Boxers," with arms extended and in close-fitting costumes. The varieties of these figures, and of the forms or trophies they carry in their hands, are among the mysteries of samplers, which are so engaging to study, and so utterly impossible of duplication.

In studying the inscriptions found on samplers, Mr. Hush finds that initials, which are then followed by signatures, occur in the earliest date. The inscriptions are moral sentences and legends, verse which is usually set in gored. In the eighteenth century the unhappy children were required to set forth the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and other long extracts from the Old Testament. Even whole chapters of the Bible are found. But the most extended task of this kind was set to six little girls in the Orphan's School, near Calcutta. "By the

"THE SAMPLERS OF OUR LOVELY ANCESTRESSES"

MR. RUSKIN once wrote for the London Art Journal a series of letters giving his idea of the kind of things which should find place in a museum. In these letters, after dealing with the planning of the building and its special fitting up, he set apart six chambers for the due exposition of the "six Queenly and Muse-taught Arts of Needlework, Writing, Pottery, Sculpture, Architecture and Painting," and proceeded to add what the different chambers should contain. To pass by the others, the Needlework Chamber should contain expositions of the structure of wool and cotton, hemp, flax and silk, the phases of its dyeing and spinning, and the mystery of weaving; and "finally, the accomplished phase of needlework, all the vicular Art of Nations—savage and civilized—from Lapland boot, letting in no snow water, to Turkey cushion bossed with pearl, to valance of Venice gold in needlework, to the counterpanes and samplers of our own lovely ancestresses."

The author of the present rather elaborate

rate work upon Samplers and Tapestry Embroideries, Mr. Marcus B. Huish, says that his book is the outcome of an exhibition held, as if following Mr. Ruskin's suggestion, at the Fine Arts Society, in London, about ten years ago, at which samplers covering every decade for the last two hundred and fifty years were shown. The interest displayed by the public in this show was remarkable, and when everybody sought the "literature" of the subject, it was found that while tapestry, embroidery and lace had their prophets, the kind of needlework shown in samplers, especially English samplers, was altogether lacking. Mr. Huish was prompted, therefore, to prepare the present work with the Fine Arts Society's exhibition as a basis, and the result is a handsome volume containing much curious information and a great number of pictures of samplers, many of them effectively printed in color.

The book, like all Gail's, is divided in three; the first part treats of "Samplers," the second of "Embroideries in the Manner of Tapestry," and the third of the "Stitchery" employed in the embroidery of both. Mr. Huish finds that while there are no samplers in existence—so far as the most enthusiastic collector can discover—having a date more remote than two hundred and fifty years, yet that samplers must have been in vogue much earlier, for those of that age "are writ all over with evidence that the sampler was then a fully developed youth, and must have been the descendant of a long line of progenitors." The earliest record which he finds is one by the poet Skelton (1469-1529), who speaks of "the Sampler to sowe on, the laces to embroide." The next is an inventory of King Edward VI (1552), which cites a parchment book containing "A Book Sampler or set of patterns worked on Normandy canvas, with green and black silks." It is only natural, at the moment, to wonder, in passing, whether King Edward VII has a sampler among his treasures.

Shakespeare knew about samplers: in "Midsummer Night's Dream," Act III, Scene 2, Helena addresses Hermia:

"O, and is all forgot?
All school-days' friendships, childhood innocency:
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both working of one song."

Samplers are alluded to elsewhere in Shakespeare. Sir Philip Sidney and Milton both speak of them, and in "The Crown Garland of Golden Roscs" (1612) is "A Short and Sweet Sonnet" made by one of the Maides of Honor upon the death of Queen Elizabeth, which she sowed upon a sampler, in red silk, to a new tune, or "Pillula Floats Me," beginning:

"Gone is Elizabeth, Whom we have lov'd so dear."

It is evident that samplers were common objects at least early in the sixteenth century [says Mr. Huish]; but the sampler of the nineteenth century differs materially both in form and design from the earlier ones. The samplers "before date," shown at the exhibition, had but little regularity. They were made for use and not for ornament. Though a sampler without either alphabets or numerals would seem to be lacking in the very essence of its being, we are told it is almost certain that the earliest forms did not contain these things, but were merely sheets of decorative designs. But as we come to the middle of seventeenth century, we find the ornamentation growing

Concerning American samplers, Mr. Huish says that "there must be a great many fine examples hanging in the houses of Philadelphia or Washington," which have some distinctively new-world character, but all his inquiries have only resulted in producing two, one from Mr. Joseph Pennell, whose ancestress, Martha C. Barton, worked it in 1825, and the other from the collection of Mrs. C. J. Longman, who obtained it in Massachusetts. Perhaps Mr. Huish did not know of the rather celebrated collection made by Mr. Alexander W. Drake, of New York. Mrs. Longman's collection of samplers, moreover, one of the most important in existence, is specially strong in foreign (i. e., Continental) specimens. She has contributed an interesting chapter to the book, in the course of which she says:

"My collection of foreign samplers includes specimens from Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain and Portugal. . . . By far the largest number of my foreign samplers come from Germany, and, next to English ones, the German seem more easy to obtain than those of any other country. . . . In the German samplers the initials of the worker and the date are almost always given, enclosed together, in a little garland or frame; but I have never seen the name signed in full. I have only once seen a German sampler with an inscription on it; in that case "Für uns geodert" is worked above a representation of the Crucifixion. . . . Comparing foreign samplers with English, one or two differences at once stand out. The foreign samplers are seldom worked in a pictorial form. They hardly ever, except in France, have verses or texts worked on them. The age of the worker is never given. This is much to be regretted, as in these three things lies much of the personal interest of the English samplers. On the other hand, from a practical point of view, if one goes to one's samplers as to pattern books for good stitches, designs and effects of color, England no longer takes the first place, and one would turn for them to the samplers of Germany, Spain and Italy."

In the section of the book devoted to "Tapestry Embroideries," the author notes that, as in the case of samplers, the industry had no apparent infancy, all the pieces having the same matured appearance, and also that no specimens have been found earlier than the reign of Elizabeth. He therefore concludes that the fashion for these embroideries was a reflection of the fashion for woven tapestries. In the sixteenth century embroidery had reached the zenith of its popularity, and it would be entirely natural for ladies to work cushions for the oak chairs, and pictures of the same material as the tapestry-covered walls. Besides being admirable specimens of needlework, these pictures yield an enormous amount of historical information, and they are "hardly inferior as mirrors of fashion," says the author, "to the pictures of Van Dyck or the engravings of Holkar." As trustworthy records of both men's and women's dress of that time, they are certainly of very considerable value.

In Part III Mrs. Huish gives detailed and wondrous information as to the "stitchery" of both samplers and tapestry pictures, with pictures of magnified bits of embroidery to serve as diagrams, and of the implements used, and a chapter on materials. The large colored plates, of which there are thirty, are very well done, and the scores of photographs in half-tone are beautifully printed on highly glazed paper. The book is very attractive in its stamped binding, and will delight the class of readers for whose delatation it has been made. Only six hundred copies have been printed.

SAMPLER VERSE

PORTSMOUTH, 15 June, 1920.

MY DEAR MRS. BOLTON:

Fantastically enough, the first thought which comes to mind as I glance through the verses laboriously stitched into your century and a half of samplers is one of devout thanksgiving that you did not submit them to me when I was still a practicing professor. For, while so employed, I might have been tempted to discern in them good material for a thesis tending toward the degree of Doctor of Philosophy; and, if such degree had thus been attained, the winner thereof would have been apt presently to offer, wherever he chanced to be employed, elaborate courses of instruction in Sampler Poetry.

Nothing short of this intensive study could so deal with the matter as to result in any definite contribution to literary history. Were I a little younger, or a good deal stronger, your wish would tempt me to undertake it; except that, as it would demand patient months, if not years, it could hardly be completed in time for the first edition of your book. This consideration, which somewhat consoles me, must be my excuse for comments so cursory that you may rightly find them unworthy of place in your pages.

To begin with, the evidence on which not long ago I based a message to you that, so late as 1812, the verses on a sampler in my possession were composed by the poetastic father of the rather weak-minded stitcher—whom I remember as an old woman—proves worthless. I possess the draft in her father's handwriting:

"Tell me, ye knowing and discerning few,
Where I may find a friend both firm and true,
Who dares stand by me in my deep distress,
And then her love and friendship most express?"

The normal answer, I suppose, would have been "My Mother"; in this case, domestic circumstances altered it to "My Ant". Until I saw your collection of verses, I had supposed it original. To my dismay,

I discover a version of it there as early as 1718; and it is repeated five times—last in 1827. The conclusion I draw from these incomplete premises I believe tenable: namely, that throughout the whole range of sampler-poetry the only trace of originality to be found is in the signatures and the dates.

By far the most frequent of the rhymes tends to confirm this opinion. Among the examples you have sent me it is the only one which occurs frequently before 1700. So nearly as I can make out, it first appears in 1675, somewhat as follows:

“Isabel Erey is my name
And with my needle I wrought the same”.

With variations, you will find it repeated more than a hundred times before 1830, most frequently in some such form as this:

“Hannah Weeks is my name,
New England is my nation,
Greenland is my dwelling-place,
And Christ is my salvation”.

The next most usual, also with many variations, appears to be the familiar couplet, perhaps metrically based on the New England Primer:

“When this you see
Remember me,”

duly followed by signature and date, though generally lacking the precise local address. The two are more than once combined, by adding to something like the first a third couplet:

“And which whenever you chance to see

These examples fairly indicate the general poetical and literary quality of the species of expression which they represent.

To pass to the substance of these artless epigrams, a great many of them concern religion, mostly of Calvinistic shade, sometimes pretty deep. Whoever has classified them for you has put seventy-eight, of which a dozen or so are often repeated, under the head of Christ, and one hundred and ten, of which ten are repeated more or less, under that of the Old Testament. Among the latter, by the way, are two rhymed versions of the Ten Commandments, and among the former two of the Lord's Prayer, by no means so skillful as that in the Divine Comedy. For general purposes, the subdivision appears needless; it were better to say that at least one hundred and eighty-eight of these rhymes directly concern the orthodox principles of New England religion, and that a great many more imply them. Death and Sorrow, for example, are represented by no less than one hundred and sixty-eight examples between 1730 and 1830; and Virtue, which appears to have become increasingly popular with the rise of Revolutionary sentiment, by two hundred and twenty-eight, between 1730 and 1829. Patriotism, though, was of late growth; there are only nine classified examples, the first of 1770 and the last of 1826; and at least two of these might just as well have been placed under Death and Sorrow. The shorter runs thus:

"Mourn, hapless brethren, deeply mourn!
The source of every joy is fled;
Our Father dear, the Friend of Man,
The God-like Washington is dead."

A comparison of this quatrain, probably composed in 1799 or 1800, with the earlier verses I have happened to set down, instantly shows what is generally true: on the whole, the later verses—those which first appear after 1760, let us say—are apt to be a little smoother, a bit more sophisticated, than those formerly found satisfactory. Not many, however, display any memorable degree of literary culture. Quite possibly, to be sure, some of them might be traced by study to higher origin than I have happened to detect. Pope is often quoted: in 1785 occurs the couplet

" 'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined; "

and in 1794, the following lines are specifically referred to him:

"Virtue outshines the stars, outlives the tomb, Climbs up to heaven and finds a peaceful home".

One could find many traces of him on later samplers, but none, I think, in contemporary ones. When the first of these couplets was stitched, he had been dead forty-one years, and the second was stitched nine years later. Of Johnson I have discovered no evident influence, and but a little of Goldsmith or of Gray. Minute scrutiny does reveal a gloomy ray or two from Young.

And here are a few casual examples, from more or less similar origin. Whoever cares to find out where they came from can probably do so from the Anthology which follows, without excessive pains:

1. (1766) "Beauty and Pride we often find Betray the weakness of the mind;
He handsom is and merits praise
That handsom does, the Proverb says."
2. (1787) "Teach me to feel another's wo,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show
That mercy show to me."
3. (1798) "So let me live, so let me die,
That I may live eternally."
4. (1805) "Man wants but little here below", etc.
5. (1805) "My thoughts on awful subjects roll,
Damnation and the dead," etc.
6. (1812) "Good when He gives, supremely good,
Nor less when he denies,
Even crosses from his sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise".
7. (1820) "Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound", etc.
8. (1824) "When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies,
I bid farewell to every fear
And wipe my weeping eyes."
9. (1827) "Jesus, Lover of my Soul", etc.

The familiar poets, though, seem chiefly to have been the native Yankee classics—Wigglesworth and the New England Primer—and the writers of popular hymns. I have been so careless as to mislay my reference to one sampler clearly based on Wigglesworth's "Day of Doom". The rhythm of the New England Primer reveals itself fourteen times between 1724 and 1821 in the lines

"Let virtue be
A guide to thee,
And innocence
Be thy defence."

The 76th Hymn, on the other hand—I know not from what collection—occurs twice, once in 1795 with six stanzas, of which the first begins, "Lo, He comes with clouds descending".

PLATE LXXX

MARY ANN FESSENDEN VINTON'S SAMPLER. 1819
The Emma B. Hodge Collection

As I have turned over your hundreds of slips, very few have impressed me as at all exceptional. Here are some of these:

1. (1757) "In Mother's womb Thy fingers did me make,
And from the womb Thou didst me safely take;
From breast Thou hast me nurst my life throughout.
I may say [that] I never wanted ought."
2. (1795) "I've been to church and love to go,
'Tis like a little heaven below;
Not for my pleasure or my play
Will I forget the Sabbath Day."
3. (1796) "Adam alone in Paradise did grieve,
And thought Eden a desert without Eve,
Until God pitying of his lonesome state
Crowned all his wishes with a loving mate.
What reason then hath Man to slight or flout her,
That could not live in Paradise without her?"

(Mary Gates)

(Incidentally, one may hope that the heavenly joys of Mary Gates, who stitched these germinal lines, are enhanced by the rapid growth of female suffrage nowadays.)

4. (1810) "God counts the sorrows of His saints,
Their groans affect his ears,
He has a book for their complaints,
A bottle for their tears".

(A hundred and ten years ago, of course, the deplorable view of stimulants implied by the Second Chapter of the Gospel according to Saint John had not yet been irradiated by the light of constitutional prohibition.)

5. (1817) "Father of light and life! Thou God supreme!
O, teach me what is good! Teach my Thyself,
Save me from folly, vanity and vice,
From every low pursuit, and feed my soul,
With knowledge, conscious peace, and virtue pure,
Sacred, substantial, never-fading bliss."

(This is noteworthy as almost the only unrhymed verse in your whole collection.)

6. (1828) "Could we with ink the ocean fill,
Were the whole earth of parchment made,
Were every single stick a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade,
To write the love of God above
Would drain the ocean dry,
Nor could this scroll contain the whole
Though stretcht from sky to sky.
Were the whole realm of Nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

One might go on like this forever, remarking, for example, that in 1819 Mary Austin, at the end of a long celebration of the glories of God, reveals extensive knowledge of infant prayer in the lines

"I lay my body down to sleep;
Let angels guard my head,
And through the hours of darkness keep
Their watch about my bed."

We should never get away from where we began. It seems like an atmosphere of stifflingly priggish formalism, saved from hypocrisy only by unintelligence, and refreshed—if at all—only by occasional whiffs of lukewarm sentimentality. You will find counterparts of these verses in the commencement parts of our Yankee colleges throughout the generations when the faded lines were stitched. You will find epitaphs to match them on plenty of gray slate Yankee grave-stones. You will find dreary models for all these conventions in the long unread and no longer deeply revered Yankee sermons which make sleepy the shelves of our older libraries. You may smile, or chafe, as you choose, rejoicing that we breathe air more free than ever invigorated our ancestors. But, after all is said and done, you can hardly deny that they bred a race earnest, strong, and—so far as humanity may be—pure of heart. In moods like this, the prayer on the seal of Boston city comes to mind:

"Sicut patribus sit Deus nobis".
(As to our fathers so be God to us.)

It is impossible, you see, to plunge into old New England without falling to moralizing, which does no harm here; for until one begins flatly to moralize, one cannot imagine what manner of beings the dead and gone children were who stitched the samplers.

Forgive me for not writing about them more learnedly, and believe me always

Sincerely yours,

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Wendell did not live to read the proof of the letter which he so kindly contributed to the book.

Under the stimulus of Mr. Wendell's letter, it was almost impossible to refrain from delving into contemporary literature to see what a short digging in that unaccustomed soil would produce in the way of authorship for the verses following. The ordinary quotation books have proved themselves almost useless in the search. Moreover misquotation, quotations adapted to the youthful mind, and paraphrased quotations have proved a great stumbling block in the progress of the searcher. A girl in those days thought nothing of blending Pope and Edward Young in one uneasy whole, which it is hard for the would-be identifier to detect.

But there is one result too evident to be ignored by any who study these verses, and that is the overwhelming influence of the Rev. Isaac Watts. He is by far the oftenest quoted writer, and if the local ministers or school-teachers wrote a verse to be put upon the children's samplers, they were sure to copy Watts as nearly as they dared—and sometimes nearer than they ought. The strange part is that the children in their quotations from Watts seldom chose his cheerful verse. "Hark from the tombs a doleful sound" was much more to their taste than one of his triumphal psalms. Truly the terror of the law and of death was early inculcated, in those days. After a prolonged contemplation of these lugubrious expressions, one turns to our own time with a sense of relief, and the reflection that, though we may not be so intent on saving our own souls, we may contribute by joy and good cheer to the saving of others.

Of secular authors, Alexander Pope leads all the rest. The same uneasy feeling again assails the searcher after knowledge, for one is entirely unable to distinguish at a glance or even after much study the real Pope from his close imitators. His style of verse and his somewhat cynical outlook are imitated again and again. Edward Young, Goldsmith, Cowper, Congreve, Thompson, John Bunyan, Gay, and Milton all have their admirers, but only one girl so far quoted Shakespeare. She embroidered the famous sampler quotation from Titus Andronicus—perhaps because she hated doing her sampler so—and remains the only user of the works of the great poet.

There are, of course, many crude verses which must have been the work of local poets, and in a few cases the tradition has come down that the sampler maker wrote her own. One and all, however, reflect the philosophy of the time. As Margarettta Arabella Godman wrote:

"By virtue ripened from the bud
The flowers angelic odors breathe,
The fragrant charm of being good
Makes gandy vice to smell like weeds."

AN ANTHOLOGY OF SAMPLER VERSE

IN PRAISE OF PATRIOTISM

1 1770

The Love of Liberty with life was given
And Life itself is the inferior gift of heaven.

2 1781

While hostile foes our coasts invade,
In all the pomp of war arrayed,
Americans be not dismayed,
Nor fear the Sword or Gun.

While innocence is all our pride,
And virtue is our only Guide
Women would scorn to be defyd if led by Washington.

2a 1788

LINES ON PEACE BY AN ENGLISH LADY

Janus has closed his blood-stained door
And war and carnage rage no more
Long may sweet Peace her olive twine
Round Britain and Columbia's line
May generous friend hip's ardour strive

To keep her kindred smile alive
Nor envy's breath nor blast be near
To force from virtue's eye to war
But each brave country prove this creed
That truth and honour best succeed

ANSWER BY A DAUGHTER OF COLUMBIA

Thus sung a muse of Britains Isle
Columbia's goddess with a smile
Responded to the lay

Yes from henceforth let discord cease
And all the world be wrapt in peace
And shine in Heaven's own day.

3 1798 ON WAR

Why these scenes that would the feeling mind
This sport of death, this cockpit of mankind
Why sobs the widow in perpetual pain
Why cries the orphan x oh my father's slain
Why hangs the sire his paralytic head

And nods with manly grief x my son is dead
Oh could I paint the passion I can feel
Or paint a horror that would wound like steel
To the unfeeling unrelenting mind
I'd send a torture and releive mankind

4 1799

With love she is queen ye American fair to adorn your mind bend all your care.

5 After 1799

ON THE DEATH OF GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON WHO DIED DECEMBER 14, 1799

Illustrious Shade if artless hands are mine
Could for the Hero's now a chaplet twine.
The muse for thee would cull each opening bloom.
And with unfading garlands deck thy Tomb.

[ON LIBERTY]

Oh Liberty! thou Power supremely bright,
Profuse of bliss, and fragrant with delight,
Perpetual pleasures in thy presence reign,
And smiling plenty leads thy wanton train.

Religion smiles beneath thy heavenly light,
And Industry looks cheerful in thy sight,
Thou mak'st the gloomy face of nature gay,
Giv'st beauty to the sun, and pleasure to the day.

IN PRAISE OF LOVE

1739

One did commend me to a Wife Fair and Young
That had French Spannish and Italian Tongue
I thank'd him kindly and told him I loved none such
For I thought one tongue for a Wife too much
What love ye not the Larned Yes, as my Life
A Learned Schollar, but not a Larned Wife.<sup>1</sup>

1769

When in love I do commence
May it be with a man of sense

Brisk and arey may he be,
Free from a spirit of jealousy.

1. When this you see, remember me . . .<sup>2</sup>
2. And hear me in your mind.

What others say when I'm away
Speak of me as you find.

1790

Little Bud of opening red
Where the blooming Graces dwell,
Nodding o'er thy dewy bed,
In thy verdant mossy cell.

With lovers hand should some fond youth
To Delia's breast thy beauties bear,
Go and learn this sacred truth,
That greater beauties flourish there.

No Star so bright
As my delight.

As on some lonely building top
The sparrow tells her moan

Far from the tents of joy & hope
I sit and grieve alone

1796

When this you see
Think of me
Tho many a mile
We distant be

The gift is small
But love is all
Death only parts
Unighted<sup>1</sup> hearts

15

1801

Belov'd till life could charm no more
And mourn' I till life shall thee restore.

1803

Tho broad Alantic rolls between Fair England's isle and me
On Fancy's wings I fly unseen
And oft converse with thee.

No barrier Ocean can divide
Affection's kindred love
And that I've ne'er forgotten thee
Let this Memento prove

1803

Kind heaven O grant me but this
I would not by many be known

And to fill up my measure of bliss
I ask the esteem of but one

1804

O let my name engraven stand
Both on thy heart and on thy hand

Seat me upon thine arm and wear
That pledge of love forever there

1806

Sweet bud to Myra's bosom go
And live beneath her eye
There in the sun of beauty blow

Or taste of heaven and die
Sweet earnest of the Blooming year
Whose dawning beauties speak

20

[UPON THE PROMISING FRUITFULNESS OF A TREE]

A comely sight indeed it is to see
A world of blossoms on an apple tree
Yet far more comely would the tree appear
If all its dainty blooms young apples were

But how much more might one upon it see
If all would hang there till they ripe should be but more of all in beauty would abound if every one should then be truly sound

TO THE MOTHER

Say, while you press with growing love,
The darling to your heart,
And all a mother's pleasures prove,
Are you entirely blest?
Ah no! a thousand tender cares
By turns your thoughts employ
Now rising hopes, now anxious fears
And grief succeeds to joy
Dear innocent her lovely smiles
With what delight you view,
But every pain the infant feels
The mother feels it too!

Then whispers busy cruel fear
The child, alas, may die
And nature prompts the ready tear
And heaves the rising sigh
Say! does not Heaven our comforts mix
With more than equal pain
To teach us if our hearts we fix
On earth we fix in vain
Then be our earthly joys resign'd
Since here we can not rest,
For earthly joys were ne'er design'd
To make us fully blest—

IN PRAISE OF FRIENDSHIP

65 1684
In prosperity friends are plenty
In adversity not one in twenty.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Supposed to have been written at the time of the Civil War, when families were divided between the adherents of Cromwell and the King. Miles Fleetwood, whose name, with that of Abigail Fleetwood, appears on a sampler containing this verse, was a follower of King Charles, and his brother was a General in Cromwell's army.

66

1. Tell me ye knowing and discerning few
Where I may find a friend that's firm and true
Who dares stand by me when in deep distress
And then his love and friendship most express
2. Who by a secret sympathy can share
My joy, my grief, my misery my care
He must be prudent, faithful, just and wise,
Who can to such a pitch of friendship rise.

1730

Despair of nothing that you would attain
Unwearied diligence your point will gain
Diligently practice what is good and then
Great will be thy reward in Bliss—amen
Refrain much talk, you seldom hear of any Undone by hearing, but by speaking many.
Make spare in youth, least age should find thee poor
When time is past and thou canst spare no more.
Remember well & bear in mind
A faithful friend is hard to find.

[PRECEPT I]
[HOW TO GET RICHES]

In things of moment on thy self depend.
Nor trust too far thy servant or thy friend.
With private views thy friend may promise fair.

To each unthinking being, heaven, a friend
Gives not the useless knowledge of its end;
To man imparts it; but with such a view
As, whilst he dreads it, makes him hope it too,
The hour concealed, and so remote the fear
Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.

 Nor every friend unrotten at the core,
 First, on thy friend deliberate with thyself,
 Pause, ponder, sift; nor eager in the choice,
 Nor jealous of the chosen; fixing fix;
 Judge before friendship, then confide till death.

1. Plain as this canvas was, as plain we find,
Unlettered unadorned the female mind.
No fine ideas fill the vacant soul,
No graceful coloring animates the whole.
2. With close attention carefully inwrought,
Fair education paints the pleasing thought,
Inserts the curious line on proper ground,
Completes the whole, and scatters flowers around.
3. My heart exults, while to the attentive eyes
The curious needle spreads the enamell'd dyes,
While varying shades the pleasing task beguile,
My friends approve me, and my parents smile

In learning take great delight,

Beauty will soon fade away,
But learning never will decay.

110

1808

Adorn your heart, adorn your mind
With knowledge of the purest kind 111

1809

While thus we practice every art
To adorn and grace our mortal part

Let us with no less care devise
To improve the mind that never dies.

Sweet is the morning of youth
Inspired with knowledge and truth.

Oft shall I wish but wish in vain
To enjoy youth's careless hours again

114

1812

Youth if set right at first with ease go on
And each new task is with new pleasure done
But if neglected till they grow in years
And each fond Mother her dear children spares Errorr becomes habitual and you'll find
'Tis then hard labour to reform the mind

115

Before 1816

In this early life to me oh Lord
Thy pard'ning mercy show

Well employed each Day be found

Each Month new stores of Knowledge yield
With added worth each year be crowned

True dress is this, be not to modes confined,
True ornament's a well instructed mind.

CELESTIAL WISDOM

How happy is the youth who hears
Instructions warning voice
And who celestial wisdom makes
His early only choice
For she has treasures greater far
Than east or west unfold
And her reward is more secure
Than is the gain of gold
In her right hand she holds to view

A length of happy years
And in her left a prize of fame
With honour bright appears
She guides the young with innocence
In pleasures path to tread
According as her labours rise
So her rewards increase
Her ways are ways of pleasantness
And all her paths are peace.

IN PRAISE OF SAMPLERS

Cir. 1630

1. ———— is my name
And with my needle I wrought the same

2. And if my skill had been better
I would have mended every letter.

1707

This needle work of mine can tell
When I was young I learned well

And by my elders I was taught
Not to spend my time for naught.

1789

This needlework of mine was taught not to spend my time for naught.

Not pleasing objects which soon pass the sight,
Or richest food that highest tastes delight.
Not numbered music which captivates the ear,
Or gayest dress that pleases much the fair,
With virtue equal are, my greetings, maid,
These clog our sense, this to the mind gives aid,
This New Year's gift your sampler may adorn,
And pattern be to others yet unborn.

1747

Behold the labour of my tender age
And view this work which did my hours engage
With anxious care I did these colours place
A smile to gain from my dear parents face
Whose care for me I ever will regard
And hope that heaven will give a kind reward
My little faults I hope you will excuse
Then your commands on me I'll not refuse.

1. This work in hand my friends may have
When I am dead and in my grave
2. And which whenever you chance to see
May kind remembrance picture me
While on this glowing canvas stands
The labour of my youthful hands

133

1767

Blame not my work, if fault you see
Few earn with + + you ———

1767

My friends I hope you are pleased & so shall I
If this my work I may get credit by Much labor & much time it hath me cost
I will take care that none of it be lost

135

Cir. 1775

[Sarah Ann Sonder] worked this in great speed
And left it here for you to read.

136

Oft as thine eye shall fondly trace
Those few lines I here exact 1784

Whate'er the time where'er the Place
Remember me my Friends.

137

1787

Though young in age And small in stature
Yet I have skill To form a letter.

1787

Behold when I try
My needle can vie
With my pen and my pencil to prove

My very fond wish
Is centerd in this
To gain my dear parents your love

139

Behold this early sampler may Show Readers at a future day

That I was taught before too late
All Sorts of idleness to hate

140

Olive Bosworth is my name and with my needle I work the same

A time to work my parents give
I will ne'er forget it while I live

141

1796

These pollish'd arts, have humaniz'd mankind
Soft'en'd the rude and calm'd the boistrious mind.

Here you may see my work tho course<sup>1</sup>
When I lie moulding in the dust.

1801

I cannot perceive This business design'd
For anything more Than to pleas a raw mind

1802

1. Of female arts in usefulness
The needle far excels the rest
In ornament there's no device
Affords adornings half so nice

2. While thus we Practice every art
To adorn and grace our mortal part
Let us with no less care device
To improve the mind that never dies.

1803

While I my needle ply with skill
With mimic flowers my canvas fill
O may I often raise

My thoughts to Him who made the flowers
And gave us all that we call ours
And render youthful prais

146

Betsy Lincoln is my name
At ten years old I wrought the same

What days more happy mark lifes busy stage
Than those when education forms our age

[ON THE INVENTION OF LETTERS—THE ANSWER]

The noble art to Cadmus owes its rise	The airy voice and stopp'd the flying sound
Of painting words and speaking to the eyes	The various figuers by his pencil wrought
He first in wondrous maggick letters bond	Gave colour form and body to the thought

Nathaniel Low's Almanack. 1806. No author given.

1828

Whence did the wondrous mystic Art arise	That we by tracing magic lines are taught
Of painting speech and speaking to the eyes	How both to colour and embody thought.

This to my friends when I am gone	Remember that I wrought the same
I leave for them to look upon	For underneath you find my name.

1806

1. When Youth's soft season shall be o'er	2. As memory o'er this task shall wake
And scenes of Childhood charm no more	And retrospective pleasure take
My riper years with Joy shall see	How shall I wish but wish in vain
This proof of infant Industry.	To enjoy Youth's careless hours again.

Mary Tucker Is My Name	And Practice Every Useful Art
May I Excell in Deeds Of Fame	That May My Happiness Impart.

In fair proportion see the letters stand
 A beauteous equal and impressive band
 With eye of care we must their structure raise
 A point too much the hand unskilled betrays
 A thread misplaced their symmetry despoils
 And the fond hope of excellence beguiles
 So my sweet girl the path of life survey
 And tread with caution o'er devious way
 An erring step would blast thy budding fame
 And with dishonor stamp my Mary's name
 From rules of virtue shouldst thou careless stray
 Nor sighs nor tears can e'er the forfeit pay
 For female reputation wounded dies
 No blest Panaceas this wide world supplies.

1808

When I was young and quite untaught	But when Im older and know more
These letters I with needle wrought	Ill make them better than before

PLATE LXXXVI

THE DOWN FAMILY RECORD. 1828

Made by "M. D."

1808

Thus when my draught some future time invades
 The silk and figure from the canvas fades
 A rival hand recalls from every part
 Some latent grace & equals art with art
 Transported we survey with dubious strife
 Each form & figure starts again to life.

1809

When with the needle I'm employ
 Or whatsoever I pursue

Teach me O Thou Almighty Lord
 To keep my final end in view.

1811

Dear Mother I am young and cannot show
 Such work as I unto your goodness owe

Be pleased to smile upon my first endeavor
 And Ill strive to be obedient ever

1812

Industrious ingenuity may find
 Noble employment for the female mind

158

1812

Parents and patrons of my age I now present to you
 This work in which I do engage for you to read and view.
 I ask your counsel seek your love and approbation too
 And beg a blessing from above on all the works I do.

In vain my sampler does assume
 To paint the garb of nature to the eye

Art can imitate, tho she presume
 The noblest work of nature to outvie

This sampler which appears in view,
 When first begun cost many a tear;
 The merit to my friends is due,
 Who taught me the right course to steer.

Oh heavenly Father bless my friends
 Oh bless them with peculiar care
 For I can ne'er make them amends
 Oh heavenly Father hear my prayer.

The silken threads both long and fine
 Did often break and make me sigh;
 At crosses oft we do repine,
 But still our hope's in him on high.

The thread of life may soon decay,
 The knot may slip—then all is o'er;
 Oh: may the needle ne'er give way,
 Until we reach the happy shore.

Now while my needle does my hours engage
 And thus with care I mark my name and age
 Let me reflect though few have been my years
 Crowded with sins this narrow space appears

162

1. While rosy cheeks their bloom confess
And youth thy bosom warms
Let Virtue and let Knowledge dress
Thy mind in brighter charms

1808

2. Daily in some fine page to look
Lay meaner sports aside
And let the needle and the book
Thy useful hours divide.

163

In the soft scenes of life
When cares are small and few

Cir. 1808

I'll show to others of my age
What busy hands can do.

164

The book the needle and the pen
Each hours of all will divide

And Virtue with her Peaceful train
Within my breast reside.

165

1815

Please to survey this with a tender eye
Put on good nature and lay judgment by.

166

1816

An idler is a watch that wants both hands.
As useless when it goes as when it stands.

1817

By this Exemplar I am taught
How letters great and small are wrought

So by the example of the wise
May I true virtue learn to prize

168

1817

1. Ye sprightly are whose gentle mind incline
To all that's joyous innocent and fine
With admiration in your works are read
The various texture of the twining thread.

2. Then let the needle whose unrivalled skill
Exalts the needle above the noble quill.

1821

This little piece of work I've done
And finished to my mind

And when I've this life's journey run
I hope a heaven to find.

169a

These letters which you now behold
May serve to guide a feeble hand

When many years away have rolled
These letters will securely stand

1824

This early labor of my hand
A sacred monument shall stand
And speak when years have flown away
The efforts of an infant day.

Should bounteous nature kindly pour
Her richest gifts on me
Still, O my God, I should be poor
If void of love to Thee.

O grant me then this one request
And I'll be satisfied
That love divine may rule my breast
And all my actions guide.

PLATE LXXXVII

ELIZA CROCKER'S SAMPLER. 1803
 "At Mrs. Dobell's Seminary in Boston"
 Owned by Miss Susan P. Peabody

171

This sampler wrought with so much care
Adorned with colours rich and fair
My little friend let it impart
A moral lesson to thy heart

1825

With like industry may it thou gain
That Peace which will thy mind sustain
In every trying time of need
Then wilt thou happy be indeed.

172

In the glad morn of blooming youth
The varied thread I drew
And pleas'd beheld the finished piece
Rise glowing to the view

1826

When gay youth shall charm no more
And age shall chill my blood
May I my life review and say
Behold my works are good.

173

May you dear Fanny with your needle trace,
A small memorial of your youthful days.
When learnings page, with useful arts combined,
To engage your fancy and improve your mind,
And from this source may you each pleasure know,
Which from wise precepts and industry flow,
And as through life's inconstant scenes you wave
In duties pathway ever humbly move
Of virtue, Innocence and truth possessed,
By friendship cherished by religion blessed.

1826

174

Happy the maid whose artless mind
In works of innocence can find Amusement and delight

1826

The landscape on this canvass lay
By which the blended colors may Give charm and please the sight

175

1. Accomplishments by heaven were first designed Less to adorn Than to amend the mind
Each should contribute To the general end and all to virtue, as their centre bend.
2. Th' acquirements which our best esteem invite Should not project but soften mix unite
In glaring light not strongly be displayed
But sweetly lost and melted into shade.

1827

176

The canvas thus in colours laid
Gives a just emblem of mankind

1827

Thus education good or bad
Shows on the canvas of the mind.

177

Before 1830

INDUSTRY

Tho age may shew life's best pursuits are vain
And few the pleasures to be here enjoy'd
Yet may this work a pleasing proof remain
Of youth's gay period.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.

Alexander Pope. "Essay on Criticism." Part II.

179

My youthful days will soon be o'er
And time with me will be no more

Laid in the grave we all must be
And this I have wrought for you to see

REFLECTIONS ON DEATH AND SORROW

180

DEAR CHILD DELAY NO TIME
BUT WITH ALL SPEED AMEND

THE LONGER THOU DOST LIVE
THE NEARER TO THY END

181

1730

1. If All Mankind Would Live In Mutual Love
This World Would Much Resemble That Above.
2. Remember Time Will Come When We Must Give Account To God How We On Earth Did Live.

1730

1. The rose is red the grass is green
The days are past That I have seen

2. My friends when you Those lines do see
In reading This remember me.

3. And when the bell begins to toll
The Lord have mercy on my soul

183

1731

My Life Is A Flower The Time It Hath To Last
Is Mett With Frost And Shook With Every Blast

1737

It is no wonder that men turn to Clay
When Rocks and Stones and monuments decay

185

1737

Remember time will shortly come
When we a strict account must give,

To God the righteous Judge of all
How we upon this earth do live.

1738

Did we but know our nearness to the grave
What thoughts what cogitations should we have 187

When I am dead and in my grave
And all my bones are rotten,

1739

When this you see, remember me
That I must be forgotten.

188

On earth let my example shine
And when I leave this state,

1741

May heaven receive this soul of mine,
To bliss divinely great.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Hymn for his 39th sermon, verse 6.

189

No room for mirth or trifling here,
For worldly hope or worldly fear,
If life so soon is gone;

1743

If now the Judge is at the door,
And all mankind must stand before
The inexorable throne!

190

Our days begin with trouble here
Our life is but a span,
And cruel death is always near
So strange a thing is man.

1747

Then sew the seeds of grace whilst young
That when thou comest to die
Thou'll sing that triumphant song
Death where is thy victory.

Despise the world with all its fading joys
Compared with Heaven are but trifling toys.

(See also Verse 248)

192

As One Day Goes Another Comes
And Sometimes Shew Us Dismal Dooms
As Time Rolls On New Things We See
Which With us Seldom Do Agree
Tho Now And Then a Pleasant Day,

1755

Its Long A Coming, Soon Away
Wherefore The Everlasting Truth
Is Good For Aged And For Youth
For Them To Set Their Hearts Upon
For What Will Last When Time is Done

193

1756

Remember man thou art but dust
From Earth thou came to Earth thou must 194

1764

Awake, Arise, Behold. Thou hast thy life; a leaf, thy breath, a blast.

195

Redeem the mispent life that's past,
Live each day as it were thy last.

1767

Then of thy talents take great care,
For the last day thyself prepare.

196

1767

Nothing is so sweet and beautiful as a flower
 But yet it blows and fades all in an hour
 For life as fairest flowers soonest fades
 So God takes home the most beautiful maids
 Therefore in blooming youth pray now be wise

197

1773 or 5

How oft the laughing brow of joy
 A sick heart conceals

And thro the cloisters deth in pain
 No sorrow feels

198

1774

Fragrant the rose is but it fades in time, the violet Sweet but quickly past the prime While lilies Hang their heads and soon decay and whiter Snow in minutes melt away such and so with'ring Are our early joys which time or sickness speedily Destroys.

1780

How soon the [wheel?] of Fortune turns they late who smiled in Sorrow mourns.

1784

Time cuts them all
 Both great and small.

201

1785

Why should I say 'tis yet too soon to seek for heaven or think of death,
 When I may fade before 'tis noon.

1771

1. Swift as the Sun Revolves the Day
 we hasten to the Dead
 Slaves to the wind we Puff away and to the ground we tread.

2. 'Tis air that lends us life when first
 The vital billows heave.
 Our flesh we borrow of the dust
 And when a mother's care has nurst
 The babe to manly size, we must
 With usury pay the grave.

203

1780

While God doth spare
 For death prepare.

204

1786

Aim not in gaudy cloathes to shine,
 let dress take up but little time,

Reflect how short must be thy stay,
 How vain to deck a piece of clay.

205

1786

Death is a debt to nature due that i must pay and so must you.

206

1786

When this you see
Remember me.

207

1786

Make the Extended skys Your Tomb
Let Stars record your Worth

Yet Know Vain Mortals all must die
As Nature Seeketh Birth.

208

1787

You whose fond wishes do to Heaven aspire
Who make those blest abodes yr. sole Desire
If you are wise & hope that Bliss to gain
Live well yr. Time, live not an hour in vain
Let not the Morrow yr. vain thoughts employ,
But think this Day the last you shall enjoy.

1788

Sleep by night and cares by day
Bear my fleeting life away

210

1788

Keep Death and Judgment always in y<sup>r</sup> eye
None's fit to live that is not fit to die.

Make much of precious time because y<sup>u</sup> must Take up your Lodging shortly in the dust
Its dreadful to behold the setting Sun
And Night approaching e'er your work is done.

211

1788

Why should this Earth delight us so
Why should we fix our Eyes
On this low Ground where Sorrows grow
And every Pleasure dies.

Nature shall be dissolv'd and die
The Sun must end his Race
The Earth and Sea for ever fly
Before my Saviour's Face.

While Time his sharpest Teeth Prepares
Our Comforts to devour
There is a Land above the Stars
And Joys above his Power.

When will that glorious Morning rise
When the last Trumpet sound
And call the Nations to the Skies
From underneath the Ground.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Hymns. Book II, 144.

1789

Soft Sleep be thou companion of my bed
Tho' thou bear'st the image of the dead
Oh lovely rest my weary eyes compose

And lull my senses in a sweet repose
For oh! how charming thus intranc'd to lie
Live without life and without death to die.

213

1789

The wise the foolish and the brave, must try the cold and silent grave.

Cir. 1790

My soul come meditate the day
And think how near it sta[n]ds

When thou must quit this house of clay
And fly to unknown lands.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Hymnal. Book II, 61, verse 1.

1790

How vain are all thy earthly treasures
Created beauty cannot long last—

The time diminishes at leasure
What human hands can form or cast.

216

1790

There is an hour when I must die
Nor do I know how soon 'twill come

A thousand children young as I are called by death to hear their doom

1791

Death like an over flowing stream sweeps us away
Our life's a dream an Empty tale
An empty tale, a moving flower
Cut down and withered in an hour.

"A Collection of Hymns . . . for the use of the West Society in Boston." 1803. (Hymn 146, verse 2. No author given.)

218

1791

The brightest beauty fades
The fairest flowers decay

The inevitable hour of death
there is none can keep away

1791

My flesh shall slumber in the ground
Till the last trumpets joyous sound

Then burst the chorus with sweet surprise
And to my Saviour's image rise

1791

Life is uncertain
Death is sure

sin is The death
Christ The cure.

1805

Life is short
Death is sure

Sin is the wound
Christ is the cure.

1791

Still a new spring shall Bless the earth and a New harvest rise
But the last year shall Never again revisit Mortal eyes

Each year fulfils Some new event that Heaven long decreed Before.
Removes Unnumbered lives aWay and gives unNumbered more

222

[A THOUGHT]

How like the fleeting wind away
Whole years of joy depart

But oh how slowly does one day,
Move to the mournful heart.

Nathaniel Low's Almanack. 1778.

Lord when i Leave this Mortal ground and thou
Shall bid me rise and come

Send a beloved angle down
Safe to conduct my spirit home

224

1793

Death at a distance we but slightly fear
He brings his terrors as he draws more near Through poverty pain slavry we drudge on
The worst of beings better please than none
No price too dear to purchase life & breath
The heaviest burdens easier borne than death

1793

Remember maid for die thou must
And all thy glory turn to dust.

1793

May I with innocence and peace,
My fleeting moments spend;

And when this vale of life shall cease,
With calmness meet my end.

"Hannah Hollingsworth."

227

1794

When my short glass its latest sand shall run & Death approach to fright the lookers on Softly may I sigh out my soul in air
Stand thou my pitying guardian Angels there.

Nathaniel Low's Almanack. 1770.

1795

Yet shall thy grave with rising flowers be drest
And the green turf lie lightly on thy breast
There shall the morn her earliest tears bestow
There the first roses of the year shall blow

1795

How can I weep or mourn at all
For one that fell asleep

Oh was I fit for that same call
That I might cease to weep.

1. O God how swift my moments fly
How great the thought that I must die
How shorts a day a month a year
How fast my moments disappear

1797

2. O God of love almighty Power
May I improve this present hour
Devote myself to thee in time
And ripen fast for joys sublime.

To God above and to your friends below
Still let your breast with zeal and duty glow
Time well employed is a most certain gain

Earnest of pleasure remedy for pain
Seize on the winged hours without delay
Nor trust to morrow while we live to day

241

Ah! why so vain, though in thy spring,
Thou shining, frail adored and wretched thing;
Old age will come, disease may come before,
Fifteen is full as mortal as threescore.
Thy fortune & thy charms may soon decay,
But grant those fugitives prolong their stay,
Their bases totter, the foundation shakes
Life that supports them in a moment brakes,
Then wrought into the soul let virtue shine
The ground eternal as the work divine.

Lo the young tribes of Adam rise
And thro all natur[e rove?]
Fulfill the wishes of their eyes
And taste the joys they love
They give a loose to wild desires
But let the sinners know
The strict account that God requires
Of all the works they do

The Judge prepares his throne on high
The frighted Earth and seas
Avoid the fury of his eye
And flee before his fall

How shall I bear that dreadful day
And stand the firey test
I'd give all mortal joys away
To be for ever blest.

ON THE DEATH OF A ONLY SON

1

Here drooping by thy lifeless side
Pensive, retir'd, with grief o'erborne
Lovely in death my darling pride,
Thee, the long weeping Muse shall mourn.

2

Farewell thou dearest in my heart,
Whom neither tears nor prayers could save:
Tis death's redoubled pain to part,
And leave such beauty in the grave.

3

Strong was thy wisdom wondrous child
Active and bright its early ray
Thy temper grateful, winning mild,
And love rul'd all the smiling day.

4

Ah me: that once such sweetness grac'd
Those winning smiles that angel form
Corruption's greedy train shall waste
The mouldering dust the feasting worm.

5

By night my eyes the search repeat
Sad to the glittering skies they roll
Tell me, I say the happy fate
Say where resides the blissful soul.

6

That day shall bring thee to my sight
Thy presence shall my joys restore
Fill me thou thought with vast delight
When death shall never part us more.

276

ON DEATH

When we have once resigned our sinful breath for we can die but once then after Death the immortal Soul immediately goes to endless joys or everlasting Woes.
Wise thens the Man who labours to secure
His passage safe and his Reception sure.

277

1807

Our God how faithful are his ways!
His Love endures the same:
Nor from the promise of His Grace:
blot out Thy Children's name:

This to the Parents and Their Seed Shall Thy Salvation come and num'rous Households Meet at last,
In One Eternal Home.

277a

1807

This work in hand my friends may have
When I am dead and in my grave.

1807

Youth you must not on numerous years depend,
For unknown accidents your steps attend
Some sudden illness soon may stop thy breath
And prove an inlet to Eternal Death.

1807

From Stately Pallaces we Must remove
The narrow lodgings of a grave to prove
Leave this fair train of this Light gilded room
To lie alone Beneathed in a tomb

So fades the lovely blooming flower
 Frail smiling solace of an hour

Belknap. In Middlesex Collection of Church Music. Boston, 1808.

So our transient comforts fly
 And pleasure only blooms to die

280

Death cannot make our soul afraid
 If God be [with us] there

1808

We may walk through her dark[est shade]
 And never yield to fear.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Hymns and Spiritual Songs. Book II, XLIX.

1808

Take comfort Christian when your friends in Jesus fall asleep
 Their better being never ends, why then defeated weep.
 Why inconsolable as those, to whom no hope is given.
 Death is the messenger of Peace, and calls the soul to heaven
 The saints of God from death set free, with Joy shall mount on high
 The heavenly hosts with Praises loud shall meet them in the sky
 A few short years of evil past, we reach the happy shore
 Where death divided friends at last shall meet to part no more.

1808

Teach me the measure of my days
 Thou maker of my frame

I would survey life narrow space
 And learn how frail I am

283

297

Why start men at death, so vain a thing.
When Christ himself hath taken out the sting
Live unto him in godliness and fear
And then believe me there's no cause to fear
It's but a passage and a step to be crown'd
With a crown of immortality.

ON THE TRUTH WE BELIEVE

Gr[ant] rem[emb]rane[e well t]o paint
The moment after death
The glory that surround the saint
When yielding up their breath

While they have gained we loose . . . .
We miss them day by day
But thou canst ev'ry breach . . . .
And wipe our tears away.

311

Alas the brittle clay
That built our body first

312

Swept with a hasty torrent hence
Like a vain dream we pass

313

See the leaves around us falling,
Dry and wither'd to the ground,
Thus to thoughtless mortals calling,
In a sad and solemn sound.

314

And am I born to die
To lay this body down

315

Soon as we draw our infant breath,
The seeds of sin grow up to death,

316

Enough had Heaven indulged of joy below,
To tempt our tarriance in this loved retreat,

317

Hark from the tombs a doleful sound
My ears attend the cry

318

My days just hastning to there end
Are like an evening shade
My beauty does like wither'd grass
With waning lustre fade

319

The rising morn can't assure
That we shall end the day

320

O'er thy grave shall friendship lingering pause
And view the weeping flowerets there that bloom
Shall heave the generous sigh in virtuous cause
While resignation points beyond the tomb.<sup>1</sup>

1818

And every month and every day
Tis mouldering back to dust.

Spring up and grow and wither soon
As doth the short-lived grass

1819

On the tree of life eternal,
Maid let all thy hope be staid,
Which alone for ever vernal,

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

- I. Adore no other gods but only me.
- II. Worship not God by anything you see.
- III. Rever Jehovahs name swear not in vain.
- IV. Let Sabbaths be a rest for heast and men.
- V. Honour thy parents to prolong thy days.
- VI. Thou shalt not kill nor murdering quarrels raise.
- VII. Adultry shun in chastity delight.
- VIII. Thou shalt not steal nor take anothers right.
- IX. In bearing witness never tel a ly.
- X. Covet not what may damnify.

356

In life's gay morn when sprightly youth
With vital ardor glows
And smiles with all the fairest charms
Which beauty can disclose
Deep on thy heart before its powers
Are yet by vice enslaved
Be thy creator's glorious name
And character engraved

1763

For soon the shades of grief shall cloud
The sunshine of thy days
And cares and toils in endless round
Encompass all thy ways
Soon shall thy heart the woes of age
In mournful groans deplore
And sadly muse on former joys
That now return no more.

357

Lord let the Sonshine of thy face
So clear my Eyes and Clense my heart

1767

That being seasoned with thy grace
My soul may tast how sweet thou art.

358

1769

Thine eye my bed and path survey
My public haunts and privit ways.

359

1772

From my beginning may the almighty powers,
 Blessing bestow in never ceasing showers;
 Oh, may I happy be and always blest,
 Of every joy, of every wish possessed.
 May plenty dissipate all worldly cares
 And smiling peace bless my revolving years.

1. Why should I love my sport so well, so constant in my play
 And lose the thoughts of heaven and hell
 and then forget to pray,
2. What do I read my bible for but Lord to learn thy will
 And shall I daily know thee more and less obey thee still

3. How senseless is my heart and wild
 How vain are all my thoughts
 Pity the weakness of a child
 And pardon all my faults
4. Make me thy heavenly voice to hear
 And let me love to pray
 Since God will lend a gracious ear
 To what a child can say.

There is a land of pure delight
Where saints immortal reign
Eternal day excludes the night
And pleasures banish pain
There everlasting spring abides
And never fading flowers
Death, like a narrow sea, divides
This heavenly land from ours

1802

Bright fields beyond the flood
Stand dressed in living green
So to the Jews fair Canaan stood While Jordan rolled between
But timorous mortals start and shrink
To cross the narrow sea;
And linger trembling on the brink
And fear to launch away.

Rev. Isaac Watts.

401

1. To be resign'd when ills betide,
Patient when favors are denied
And pleased with favors given,
Dear Lord, this is Wisdom's part.

The Lord my Shepherd is
I shall be well supply'd
Since he is mine and I am his What can I want beside

He leads me to the place
Where heav'nly pasture grows
Where living waters gently pass
And full salvation flows

The stars which in their courses roll
Have much instruction given
But thy good word informs my soul
How I may get to heav'n

Rev. Isaac Watts. Psalm XIII. Short metre.

Its meretricious graces to beguile
No clust'ring ornaments to clog the pile

From ostentation as from weakness free
It stands like the Cerulean arch we see Majestic in its own Simplicity

SONG XXV.

My God who makes the sun to know his proper hour to rise and to give light to all below—
Doth send him round the skies—
When from the chamber of the east his morning race begins
He never tires nor stops to rest,

But round the world he shines;
so like the Sun would I fulfill the business of the day
Begin my work [betimes, and still]
[March on my heavenly way]
Young morning of my days has all been spent in vain

SONG XXVI.

And now another day is gone,
 I'll sing my Makers praise;
 My comforts every hour make known.
 His Providence and grace,
 but how my childhood runs to waste,
 my sins how great their sum—

Lord give me pardon for the past and strength for days to come.
 I lay my body down to sleep
 Let angels guard my head, and thro the hours of darkness keep their watch around my bed.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Divine Songs for Children.

459

My God my all sufficient good
 My portion and my choice
 In thee are all my hopes renewed
 And all my powers rejoice

1819

In God place all thy confidence
 And make his word thy guide
 He will protect thy innocence
 And for thy wants provide 460

1820

Behold the path that I have trod
 My path till I go home to God

461

1818

O may their natal morn
 Be registered in heaven

And they this life adorn
 With every blessing given

462

1820

God of my soul without thy strengthening grace
 How weak how blind is human race

1821

Author of good, to thee I turn
 Thy ever wakeful eye

Alone can all my wants discern
 Thy hand alone supply.

Merrick.

464

1821

I read his awful name, emblazoned high
 With golden letters on th' illumined sky:
 Nor less, the mystic characters I see
 Wrought in each flower; inscrib'd on ev'ry tree;
 In every leaf that trembles on the breeze,
 I hear the voice of God among the trees.

465

1821

Religion, fair descendant from above
 Eternal source of happiness and love
 Low at thy throne I fall and do implore
 In my soft bosom all thy grace store

Grant me a heart obedient to thy laws
 Incline to reverence and maintain thy cause
 O grant my steps to your celestial skies
 Nor leave me here till I to them shall rise

466

Be mine a calm a thankful heart
 From every murmur free
 The blessings of Thy grace impart
 And make me live to Thee

1822

If thou my father Still art nigh
 Cheerful I live and peaceful die
 Secure when mortal comforts flee
 To find ten thousand worlds in Thee

Anne Steele. 1760. 2nd and — verses.

1822

As heat increases with the rolling hours
 Draws up the vapours and expands the flowers
 So with my childhood may my follies cease
 So may my wisdom with my years increase
 So may religion early warm my soul
 Encourage, actuate and cheer the whole.

468

1823

A charge to keep I have
 A God to glorify
 A never dying soul to save
 And fit it for the sky
 To serve the present age
 My calling to fulfil
 O may it all my powers engage
 To do my masters will.

Arm me with jealous care
 As in thy sight to live
 And O thy servant Lord prepare
 A strict account to give Help me to watch and pray
 And on thyself rely Assur'd if I my trust betray
 I shall for ever die.

1823

Author of being source of light
 With unfading beauty bright
 Fullness goodness rolling round
 Thy own fair orb without a bound
 Whether thy suppliants call
 Truth or good or all or all
 God or father thee we hail Essence that can never fail

Grecian or Barbarick name
 Thy steadfast being still the same
 Thee when morning greets skies
 With rosy cheeks and humid eyes
 Then when sweet declining day
 Sinks in purple waves away
 Thee my lips shall still proclaim
 And teach the world to bless thy name.

1823

In all my vast concerns with thee
 In vain my soul would try

To shun thy presence Lord or flee
 The notice of thine eye.

471

1824

I ask not gold or length of days,
 I ask for wisdoms brighter rays.

O clasp me in thy arms when yours
 Accept hosannas from my tongue.

472

1824

Ah lend me the wings of a dove,
 To fly from these regions of woe,

My hopes and my joys are above
 And thither my spirit would go.

473

When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the sky

1824

I bid farewell to every fear
And wipe my weeping eyes.

Rev. Isaac Watts. Book II, Hymn LXV.

474

Still the orphan & the stranger
Still the widow owns thy care

1824

Screened by the in every danger
Heard by the in every prayer

475

Now in thy youth beseech of Him
Who giveth upbraiding not
That His light in thy heart become not dim 1824

And His love be unforgot
And thy God in the darkest of days will be Goodness and beauty and strength to thee.

476

One day amidst the place where my dear god hath been is sweeter than ten thousand days of pleasurable sin

1825

My willing sould would stay in such a frame as this i sit and sing myself away to everlasting bliss.

HEAVEN BRIGHTER THAN EARTH.

Those skies no night that wear
Nor cloud nor tempest know
Those flowers no blight that bear
Those streams that stainless flow
Are they not brighter far
Than all that lures us here
Where storms may fright each timid star
From midnights lonely sphere.

Here Hope of Sorrow drinks
Here fades with care
And Virtue from Temptation shrinks
And Folly finds Despair
But mid that world above
No baneful step may stray
The white winged seraphs glance of love
Would melt each ill away.

Friendship is there the guest
Of chilling doubt no more
And Love with thornless breast
Whose Pangs and fears are o'er
There is no farewell sigh
Throughout that blessed clime
No murmuring voice nor severed tie
No change of weary time
Why plant the Cypress near
The Pillow of the Just
Why dew with murmuring Tear
Thier calm and holy dus[t]
Rear there the roses Pride
Bid the green myrtle bloom
Pie[k] emblems of their joys who bide
Beyond the insateate tomb.

Mid that celestial Place
Our searing thoughts would glow
E'en while we run this Pilgrim race
Of Weariness and Woe.
For who would shrink from death
With sharp and icy hand
Or heed the paths of —— while breath
To win the glorious land.

Swift fly the years & rise the expected morn
O spring to light, auspicious Babe be born
See nature hastes her earliest wreathe to bring
With all the incense of the breathing spring
See lofty Lebanon his herd advance,
See nodding forests on the mountain dance
See spicy clouds from lowly sharon rise
And carmels flowery top perfumes the skies.
Hark a glad voice the lonely desert cheers,
Prepare the way a God a God appears
A God a God the vocal hills reply
The rocks proclaim the approaching Deity,
Lo earth receives him from the bending skies
Sink down ye mountains, & ye vallies rise
With heads declined ye cedars homage pay
Be smooth ye rocks ye rapid floods give way
The Saviour comes by ancient bards foretold,
Hear him ye deaf & all ye blind behold
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray
And on the sightless eye-ball pour the day
Tis he the obstructed paths of sound shall hear
And bid new musick charm the unfolding ears,
The dumb shall sing the lame his crutch forget
And leap exulting like the bounding roe.

525

Ye Hearts with youthful Vigor warm
In smiling Crowds draw near
And turn from every mortal charm
A Savior's Voice to hear.

And lays his radiant Glories by Your Friendship to Pursue.

The Soul that longs to see my Face
Is sure my Love to gain
And those that early seek my Grace
Shall never seek in vain.

What Object Lord my Soul should move
If once compar'd with thee
What Beauty should command my Love
Like what in Christ I see.

Away ye False delusive Toys
Vain Tempters of the Mind
Tis here I fix my lasting Choice
For here true Bliss I find.

Precept may teach, example move
And living pattern, lead to love;
N'or love alone; but imitate
The truly Good and therefore great;
And dost thou pant, dear girl, to find
To best exemplar for the mind?
Which n'er shall lead thy youth astray;
To follow vice in pleased way,

N'or tempt thy feet to heedless rove
Where Serpent man in ambush sleeps
N'or heed the ruined girl that weeps.
Is this thy wish, my lovely friend,
On Mary's steps do thou attend,
She leads to Jesus sacred feet
And there is Virtues peaceful seat.

ON CHRISTMAS DAY

What words, what voices can we bring,
Which way our accents raise,
To welcome our mysterious King,
And sing a Saviour's praise.

O 'tis too little all we Can,
For this unbounded Love,
All that was ever wrote by Man,
Or sung in Hymns above.

546

1810

1. Tho youth may fade with all its bloom
And nervous strength decline
Yet age shall yield a rich perfume
If innocence be thine

2. He carve my passion on the bark
And every wounded tree
Shall droop and bear some mystic mark
That Jesus died for me.

547

1811

The Lord is come the heavens proclaim
His birth the nations learn his name
An unknown star directs the road
Of eastern sages to their God.

All ye bright armies of the skies
Go worship where the saviour lies
Angel and Kings before him bow
Those gods on high and gods below.

Let idols totter to the ground
And their own worshippers Confound
But Judah shout but Zion sing
And earth confess her sovereign king.

Isaac Watts. Hymnal. Book II. CVII.

The soul who seeks me shall obtain
Immortal wealth and heavenly gain

Immortal life is his reward
Life and the favor of the Lord.

Before 1813

All ye faithful servants are of our almighty King, both high and low and small and great, His praise devoutly sing.
Let us rejoice and render thanks to his most Holy name.
Rejoice rejoice for now is come the marriage of the Lamb.
His bride herself has ready made How pure and white her dress
Which is her saints Integrity and spotless holiness.
O therefore blest is every one who to the marriage feast and Holy Supper of the Lamb is called a welcome guest.

EVENING MEDITATION ON THE CRUCIFIXION

My Lord my Saviour died, For guilty sinners sake:
 The tokens of his love Oft keep mine eyes awake.
 I cannot chuse but mourn, That He should suffer so;
 And yet it is the source Whence all my comforts flow.
 I cannot chuse but mourn, Whose sin made him To bleed;
 And yet such sacrifice My soul from death hath freed.
 'Twas not the treacherous Jews That did my Lord betray;
 It was heinous sins, More treacherous far than they.
 'Twas not the soldier's spear That pierc'd my Saviour's side,
 'Twas my Ingratitude. My unbelief, my pride.
 These were the bloody thorns That did his temples wound.
 And caus'd those sacred drops, That did bedew the ground.
 And when his Father's wrath Drew forth that bitter cry.
 He yielded up his life For rebels such as I.
 And can I chuse but mourn, When skies and rocks did rend.
 And Nature veil'd her face, At sight of such an end.
 But haste My soul to view. Thy happiness, restor'd,
 And death and hell subdu'd. By the triumphant Lord.
 Put off thy mourning weed, Thy Jesus reigns on high.
 Receiving gifts for men, For rebels such as I.

And must I Part with all I Have
 My dearest Lord for Thee.
 It is But right since Thou hast done
 Much more than this for me.

Ill Let It go, One Look from Thee
 Will more than make Amends
 For all the Losses I Sustain
 Of Credit, Riches, Friends.

The Prayers of early youth.

577

Jesus thy gracious name I will inscribe
Be Thou my Counsellor, my Friend and guide
Protect me from the dangerous snares of youth
And write upon my heart thy word of truth.

578

To Thee my God will I devote
The morning of my days

Oh keep me from the snares of youth
And I will sing Thy praise.

579

Lord how delightful tis to see
A whole assembly worship thee

At once they sing at once they Pray
They hear of heaven & love the way

Isaac Watts. Divine Songs for Children. XXVIII.

Remark this truth, enough to know
 Virtue in youth, is bliss below.

Seek virtue, and of that possest,
 To Providence resign the rest.

Ye heavens from high the dewy nectar pour,
 And in soft silence, shed the kindly shower,
 The sick and weak the healing plant shall aid,
 From storms a shelter and from heat a shade
 All crimes shall cease and ancient fraud shall fail,
 Returning justice lift aloft her scale,
 Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
 And white rob'd innocence from heav'n descend.

O Praise thy language was by Heaven designed—
As manna to the faint bewildered mind,
Beauty and diffidence whose hearts rejoice—
In the kind comfort of thy heavenly voice.
In this wild wood of life wert thou not nigh
Must like the wandering babes lie down and die.
But thy sweet accents wake new vital powers
And make this thorny path a path of flowers

THE HERMIT

1. At the close of the day when the hamlet is still
And mortals the sweet of forgetfulness prove
When naught but the torrent is heard on the hill
And nought but the nightingale's song in the grove
Twas then by the cave of the mountain afar
The hermit his song of the night thus began
No more with himself or with nature at war
He thought as a sage while he felt as a man
2. Oh why thus abandon to darkness and woe
Why thus to . . . flows thy sad strain
For spring shall return and a favor bestow
And no trace of misfortune thy bosom retain.
See truth, love and mercy in triumph descending
And nature all glowing in Edens first bloom
On the cold cheek of death smiles and roses are blending
And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb.

Candour enrobed in spotless white appears
Around her head a fragrant wreath she wears Indulgence uniformly marks her reign

And as the spark of genius brightning glows
The weed of merit gladly she bestows.

AN ACROSTIC TO MISS ANNA SANDERS

A virtuous life is surely worth
No small expense or care
Nor is the Ruby so Estecmd
As virtuous persons are

So Anna you should lead your life
And always keep in view
Never from virtue to depart
Delightful is its due
Even in youth be this thy care
Religion always to revere
So that its Blessing you may share

"To Miss Anna Sanders by her very affectionate friend Luther Bayer"

1802

THE CONTRAST

1. Virtue alone has that to give
Which makes it worth our while to live
For if we live our life in peace
And if we die our joys increase.
2. Now Vice can only that supply
Which makes it pain to live or die
For if we live tis' pain tomorrow
And if we die tis' endless sorrow.

677

1802

Let virtue guide your mind to rest
The Innocent alone are truly blest

678

1802

Be sovereign grace the guardian of my youth,
May Heaven-born virtue in my breast preside,
While Wisdom, honour, innocence and truth,
Attend my steps, and all my actions guide.

679

1803

Happy the youth who always treads
Fair virtues path which upward leads
To climes beyond the sky,

There seasons no more run their round
But constant verdure clothes the ground
And air breathes love and joy

680

1803

1. Virtue not rolling suns the mind matures
2. Happy the soul that virtue shows
To fit the place of her repose
Needless to move for she can dwell
In her own Grandsire's Hall as well
Virtue that never loves to roam
And easy on a native throne
Of humble turf sits gently down.

1806

Oh may our follies like the falling trees
 Be stripped ev'ry leaf by autumn's wind
 May ev'ry branch of vice embrace the breeze
 And nothing leave but virtue's fruit behind

Then when old age life's winter shall appear
 In conscious hope all future ills we'll brave
 With fortitude our disillusion bear
 And sink forgotten in the silent grave.

EXTRACT.

Virtue the strength and beauty of the soul
Is the best gift of Heaven; a happiness
That ever above the smiles and frowns of fate,
Exalts great Nature's favorites; it is the only good Man justly boasts of, or can call his own.

724

1811

In youth improve your tender mind
Let virtue be with knowledge join'd

Pursue the paths of truth and love
And you'll arrive to bliss above

HAPPINESS

Remember man, the Universal Cause
Acts not by partial, but by general law[s]
And makes what happiness we justly call Subsist not in the good of one but all,
There's not a blessing individuals find
But some way leans and hearkens to the kind
No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride
No caverned hermit rest all satisfied,
Who most to shun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend,
Each has his share and who would more obtain
Shall find the pleasure pays not half the pain.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOLMISTRESSES

"One did Commend me to a Wife Fair and Young
Who had French, Spannish and Italian Tongue.
I thank'd him Kindly and Told him I love'd none such
For I thought one tongue for a Wife too much.
'What love ye not the Larned?' Yes, as my Life
A Learned scholar, but not a Larned Wife!"

THIS Lydia Kneeland laboriously embroidered upon her sampler in 1743, in the Athens of America. She herself did not belong to the unlearned classes, for her brother married the daughter of President Holyoke, of Harvard College, and so she must have echoed the sentiment of the time.

It seems to have been true throughout the Colonial life that the girls were never considered worth educating, except in the "graces." From Massachusetts south, there never seems to be any question during the first century of our country's life that the boy must be educated; so grammar schools, Latin schools, and colleges grew up. In fact, one writer says frankly that, at least in Massachusetts, the break with the past hardly existed, and that the earliest New England schools were best studied in Old England. This is also true in a large measure of the schools in New Jersey after the advent of the Scotch and English. The Swedes had founded a school at Bergen in 1664, but were not very energetic about founding more.

This is not the place to write a history of education in the Colonies, but as no history of the education of girls is available, and as nearly all the samplers which have come down to us were probably made in the schools of the period, it may be interesting to know just how each of the Colonies met the situation.

The records of New Hampshire schools are very meager, and we find that "no public provision for any regular school for the education of females" had been made up to 1815. That date approximately marks the awakening of all the states to the claims of girls for an education such as a boy had received for some time. We are assured that New Hampshire had had good private schools for girls since the Revolution, though the first mentioned is that of Mrs. Montague, in Portsmouth, who had a private school for a year and a half, beginning in 1784. The samplers themselves give us two other Portsmouth schools. In 1802, Mrs. Ward had as her pupil Sarah Catherine Moffat Odiorne, whose ancestors had built the "Manor House" on Odiorne's Point, the first house in New Hampshire. Who Mrs. Ward was we have no means of knowing, nor do we know who Mary E. Hill was who taught a school in Portsmouth, in 1810, when Sarah Fitzgerald worked a sampler. (See Plate xeviii.)

Massachusetts, which of course at the time included Maine, is on the other hand very rich in material, but alas! not much better in its treatment of the "female" within its border; for, until the Revolution, a girl's education was considered by most people finished when she could read the New England Primer.

As early as 1642, there was compulsory education in Massachusetts for any town in which there were fifty families. This was frankly said, in 1647, in the Preamble to the Law concerning schools, to be the means of besting the Evil One. "The prince of darkness is shrewd enough to know that where the languages flourish there his power will be so rent and torn that he cannot readily repair it. Few of us perceive the craft and snare of the Devil."

Children of that time were enveloped at home and at school, every day in the week, by an atmosphere saturated with religion. So in many places the Bible and the Catechism were almost the only text-books. The larger towns had English schools, Latin schools, and soon Harvard College was founded. The smaller towns offered little to the boy and less to the girl; for, though the law decreed that every town of fifty families or more should maintain a school, many a town felt that it was cheaper to pay the £20 fine for not doing so.

Often the minister was also the schoolmaster, and often those men in the town who could read and write, taught in rotation. The girls had a very small chance of learning. Dorchester, for instance, left girls' education to the discretion of the selectmen, who decided against co-education. During these first seventy years of supreme indifference to education for girls, the history of the sampler in America is meager also.

As we come to the eighteenth century, there is a distinct change for the worse as regards boys as well as girls. There is less enthusiasm for learning, and the reasons are not far to seek.

"To one familiar with the early history of our state this decadence of the primitive ardor does not seem strange. It would seem more strange had the high level been maintained, for during these seventy years the little bark of state had been tossed on troubled waters. The educational history of Massachusetts is projected on a somber background. Scarcely had the colonists become settled in their new homes along the bay before dissensions among themselves brought the whole enterprise into hazard — dissensions so sharp, differences of opinion so radical, as to reach down to the bed-rock both of their civil and ecclesiastical foundations.

"During this same period heavier calamities had fallen upon them in the terrible struggle known as King Philip's War. Four years of anxious solicitude were followed by fourteen months of continuous and unmitigated horror. As the messengers came in quick succession to the patriarch Job, each telling of a new calamity, until he was stripped and desolate, so from north, east, south, and west, every day, sometimes almost every hour, brought news of villages burned and their inhabitants massacred, or of the troops sent to their rescue ambushed and butchered. From one end of the colony to the other the people in their dreams heard the war-whoop of savages and the crackling of flames, and saw the tomahawk and the scalping-knife doing their bloody work. Happy were they if they were not wakened to the reality.

"When all was over, more than half a million dollars had been spent, thirteen towns had been destroyed, six hundred buildings burned, and six hundred men, the flower of the colony, had been killed. Some towns were so impoverished that their share of the colony tax was remitted, and for three years the smaller towns were relieved from the obligation to support the grammar schools.

"Only six years later, and the gloom of the witchcraft delusion settled like a pall over the province, and swift upon the heels of this calamity came the war with the French, with Sir William Phipps's disastrous expedition against Quebec, and the new Indian atrocities upon the frontier settlements on the north and east.

"Such is the record of these first seventy years, and in them all not one without some danger or some menace of danger. When a French statesman was asked what he did during the Revolution, he replied, 'I lived.' It was much that the schools of Massachusetts lived through the trying vicissitudes of this first period.

"With the close of Queen Anne's War the province entered upon a new epoch, which brought with it changes in the school system whose influence we have not yet outlived. In the early days the fear of Indian invasion had served to hold the settlers somewhat closely together; indeed, in a part of the towns, as in Dedham, the people were forbidden to build beyond a fixed distance of one or two miles from the meeting-house. But now that this danger seemed to be over, the people began to push out into the wilderness.

"Outlying portions of the older towns were occupied, and new settlements made so rapidly that between 1700 and 1760 one hundred and twenty-three towns were incorporated, and during the next ten years forty-five more, chiefly west of the Connecticut."*

Many of these new towns were spread out all over the farming lands, with no nucleus other than the isolated church, which was usually perched on a hill. Thus educational problems were more difficult than before, and led eventually to the town being "districted off" so that each small unit might solve its problems.

There seems to be no doubt that throughout this period girls were entirely dependent on the Dame School and the "finishing school." The Dame School is hard to come at, because no records were preserved of these little schools for very young children, kept in kitchens, or sometimes in little log schoolhouses. Early in the eighteenth century, in most towns, the horn-book was the only text-book used in these schools. This was a square, flat piece of wood with a handle. Upon the flat part was put a printed sheet containing the alphabet — perhaps the Lord's Prayer or something else, always religious; over this was placed a piece of thin horn bound to the wood by brass strips and nails. These were the first primers, chained to the wall, like the books in a monastery library, and from these every child was taught to read. This was true of boys and girls alike, for boys did not go to public schools until they were seven years old, "having previously received the instruction usual at women's schools." This same scheme of education requires "that the children begin to learn arithmetic at 11 years of age; that at 12 years they be taught to make pens."* This was, of course, after the Revolution, when a slightly more lenient tone towards girls was adopted.

Meantime, the finishing school flourished. It is hard to tell just when it began, but certainly it was, "in our midst" as early as 1706. The Boston News-Letter for September 9th and 23rd advertised:

"Mistris Mary Turfrey at the South End of Boston Intends to board Young Gentlewomen: If any Gentlemen desires their Daughters should be under her Education; they may pleas' to agree with her on Terms."

"Mistris Turfrey" does not say that she will teach the "Young Gentlewomen" to make samplers. Perhaps it was because that was the period when samplers were least in favor, and such as were made seem to be the very simple kind, whose form somewhat resembles the horn-book from which girls learned their letters. If sampler art had begun with 1700, one might agree with those who think that the horn-book was the prototype of the sampler. That contention cannot be maintained, but the sampler was a very wonderful adjunct to the horn-book to educate the budding "female" mind. We have records of two quite early eighteenth century samplers made by girls of five, which must have been done at some school-dame's knee.

Apparently Boston, Salem, and Newburyport were the Massachusetts centers for the finishing school, and by 1714, Boston had a real one. The Boston News-Letter for April 19th of that year contains an advertisement which gives the curriculum of one of these schools.

"At the House of Mr. James Ivers formerly call'd Bowling Green House in Cambridge Street Boston, is now set up a Boarding School, where will be Carefully taught Flourishing,* Embroidery, and all Sorts of Needlework, also Filigree, Painting upon Glass, writing, arithmetick, and singing Psalm Tunes."

This was frivolous, practical, and religious, but furnished not much real education. Perhaps the mixture of a girls' boarding school and the Bowling Green, "where gentlemen, Merchants and others, that have a Mind to Recreate themselves could be accommodated" was not a good one, for Mr. Ivers sold the Bowling Green the next month and so made the boarding school safe for girls.

Mr. Ivers was followed by Mr. Brownell, who apparently wished to out-advertise the school at the Bowling Green House.

"This is to give Notice, That at the House of Mr. George Brownell,† late School Master in Hanover Street Boston, are all sorts of Millinary Works done; making up of Dresses, and flowering of Muslin, making of furbelow'd Scarffs, and Quilting, and cutting of Gentlewomens Hair in the newest fashion; and also young Gentlewomen and Children taught all sorts of fine Works, as Feather-Work, Filagre and Painting on Glass, Embroidering a new way, Turkey-Work for Handkerchiefs two ways, fine new Fashion Purses, flourishing and plain Work, and Dancing cheaper than ever was taught in Boston, Brocaded-Work for Handkerchiefs and short Aprons upon muslin, artificial Flowers work'd with a needle."

These two men were not without their rival in Mrs. Rebecca Lawrence, who had a school in Boston for many years. The New England Weekly Journal for Monday, October 4th, 1731, gives a notice of her death.

"On Saturday last died Mrs. Rebecca Lawrence, a noted and useful School-mistress in this Town."

From 1741 to 1760, somewhere near Boston, if not in the city itself, some teacher set her children the task of making a semblance of the older type of sampler. There are five of these still in existence, three of which are so alike as to be as nearly identical as the personalities of the makers allow. The cross-borders at the top are alike in sequence, and at the bottom are Adam and Eve, the Tree of Knowledge, and a wonderful fat worm of a serpent.‡

* Flourishing thread was a flat linen thread used for darning damask and linen, and also used for netting.

† News-Letter, August 27, 1716.

‡ Mary Parker, 1741; Maria Davenport, 1741; Rebekah Owen, 1745; Hannah Tyler, 1753; Ruth Haskell, 1760.

Rebecca Owen made one four years later, but aside from the fact that the serpent has a family resemblance in its obesity, one could not be sure that it was the product of the same school. (See Plates xv and xvi.)

Just at this time Elizabeth Waldron had a boarding school at the foot of the Common. She advertised her removal in The Boston Weekly News-Letter for Friday, March 19, 1752.

"Elizabeth Waldron who hath kept a Boarding School at the Bottom of the Common, purposeth next Monday to remove to Milton, Within half a mile of the Paper Mills:—Where young Ladies that intend to escape the Distemper may be accommodated as usual."

There had been a universal and often fatal throat distemper in the thirties, and it was perhaps fear engendered by the remembrance that induced this flight.

Salem, in point of time, contributes the next school for finishing young ladies, and it is interesting because it is the first instance that the word Academy is used to designate a girls' school. After 1790, the word became very common, and so it is interesting that in 1748 there was a "Union Academy" in which Mary Crowninshield* embroidered a sampler.

Just at this time the Boston papers were full of advertisements of boarding schools for girls. From February to May, 1748, a very clever person sought pupils, and if she could do well all that she advertised she surely deserved to be a very popular schoolmistress.

"This may inform young Gentlewomen in Town and Country, That early in the Spring, Mrs. Hiller designs to open a Boarding-school at the House where she lives, in Fifth Street, at the North End of Boston, next Door to Doctor — Wax-Work, Transparent and Filligree, Painting upon glass, Japanning, Quill-Work, Feather-Work and embroidering with Gold and Silver, and several other sorts of Work not here enumerated, and may be supplied with Patterns and all sorts of Drawing and Materials for their work."

Mrs. Sarah Morehead, "at the Head of the Rope Walks, Fort Hill," also taught "Drawing, Japaning, and Painting on Glass."

Certainly by the middle of the century, Boston had become quite prosperous, and was beginning to have most advanced ideas in the handicraft of the time. It is too bad that we cannot tell in which of these schools of the period the Boston samplers were made, but the girls certainly had opportunities offered them to learn.

It is impossible to tell now how long each of these schools flourished, since we have only the advertisements to rely upon. A cessation of publicity might mean either that the school had not paid, or had become so popular that it needed no further aid from the press. The next candidate for favor seems to be a shade less ambitious than her predecessors in knowledge, but more so in her stock of goods. The advertisements appear from 1751 to 1753.

"ELIZABETH MURRAY"

Next door to Deacon Bouteneau's in Cornhill, Boston.

Teaches Dresden, and other kinds of Needle Works, likewise accomodates young Ladies with Board, and half-Board at a reasonable Price; sells flowered and clear Lawns, Cambricks, Muslins, Gauze, newest Fashion Caps, Ruffles, Tippetts, Stomachers, Solitaires, Necklaces, Ear Rings, Ivory, Ebony and Bone Stick Fans, Womens Shoes, Stockings, Gloves and Mittens, Canvas, Crewels, Floss, Flowering and Nuns Threads, Needles, Pins and Tapes, with Sundry other Articles." (1751.)

Miss Murray evidently had a deadly rival during her first year, but as the Misses Purcell advertised but once, and Miss Murray kept on advertising, the supposition is that one succeeded and the other did not; but on our former line of argument, the result is a good deal like "the Lady or the Tiger," and one guess is as good as another. Here is the Purcell announcement:

"Taught by ELINOR and MARY PURCELL opposite the Rev. Mr. Checkley's Meeting House, Summer Street, Boston.

Dresden on Lawn and Muslin, and Work in Imitation of Brussell lace and all other Sorts of Needle Work and Shell Work, and Flower for the Head, in the neatest Manner; Likewise accomodate young Ladies with Board and half Board, at a reasonable Rate.

N.B. Likewise make up all sorts of Millinery Work; after the newest Fashion." (1751.)

Miss Murray continued to call attention to her school:

"ELIZABETH MURRAY"

"Teaches Dresden and Embroidery on Gauze, tent Stitch, and all sorts of colored Work; takes young Ladies to board or half-board, at a very reasonable Rate; likewise sells Gold and Silver Gymp, Plate, Twist and Thread, Shades of Naples, Floss, and fine Silk, Cambrick and Cotton Thread, and Muslin for Dresden, with a variety of Cambrick and Lawn and Gauze, with other Millinery Goods and white Gauze Shades." (1753.)

Miss Murray was followed in 1757 and 1758 by Eleanor McIlvaine, who had a school opposite the Governor's. Her advertisement is modest and short and she does not wish to "board or half-board" her pupils.

The following year a new person steps into the limelight, and thereafter, except for a few vague hints here and there, we hear little of Boston schools for nearly forty years.

"MRS. JANE DAY opposite the Brazen Head in Cornhill, Boston, Has opened School, and teaches in the neatest and newest manner, Embroidering in Gold and silver, and all sorts of Shaded Work in Colours, Dresden and plain Work, etc. where also Ladies may be boarded or half-boarded as may be most convenient for Town or Country, and can supply her Scholars with Materials for Work.

N.B. Maker in the newest Fashion all sorts of Millinery Work."

About 1764, Mary Dedman made a most beautiful needlework picture in a Boston school, probably taught by a Mrs. Rawson, but no research has yet brought to light any more knowledge of her school.

Newburyport has been mentioned as another flourishing center for girls' finishing schools, and certainly there were a large number of samplers of a very elaborate kind done in the town. The only specific mention of any school is on a sampler made by Eliza Reed, aged thirteen, "under the tuition of Harriet Ellis." The sampler contains a picture of a large house, which was probably a view of the girl's own home, or the house in which the school was held. The sampler is undated, but is of the type more common after the Revolution; in fact, common as late as samplers were embroidered.

A little later appear three samplers worked by Newburyport girls, Sally Johnson (1799), Mary Little (1800), and Mary Coffin (1801), which bear the trade-mark of some teacher's imagination, stimulated by commerce with the tropics. Each shows one or more negro slaves waiting upon gentlemen and ladies, all have orange trees, and the most elaborate (see Plate civ) contains also banana and date palms. These samplers are not actually alike, but are too nearly so in spirit not to have been done under the same teacher's eye. Perhaps one girl a year was allowed to use this subject as a reward for her deftness with the needle. Joanna Huse of Newburyport in her undated sampler records that she did it in her eleventh year "under the tuition of Maria S. Aiken."

The Revolution slowed down many activities which had to do with the amenities of life; and girls' education of the period might certainly be called one of these. The only girls' school of which we have record during this period is Sarah Stivour's. This school was probably in Salem, since Beverly, Salem, and Lynn girls went there. Four samplers of her teaching have come down to us, and they are all distinguished by a form of very long stitch in crinkly silk to designate the grass in dark green, and in blue and white overhead to indicate the sky. This stitch is often two inches long, and slants in parallel lines from the top, in the case of the sky. The lower edge is in long scallops or waves. The grass below in dark green has the same wavy edge at the top. Upon this precarious perch stand a man, a woman, sheep, and a spotted dog. A floral border surrounds three sides, and sometimes above the alphabets is an arbor.* This school lasted from 1778 to 1786 certainly, and if all the samplers there are could be gathered together we might find that it lasted longer still. (See Plates xc and xci.)

Other Massachusetts schools are recorded before 1800. Miss Southerland had a school in Boston about 1785, where embroidery was taught. No sampler that can be identified has come from this school, but a piece of embroidery done by Hannah G. Gowen, when eleven years old, is still extant, as a proof. This embroidery is in Louis XVI style, a bunch of flowers tied with a bow, embroidered on black satin; and to this is appended a certificate, in French, from her teacher. A rather simple sampler is inscribed, "Salla White her sampler, made by her own hand at Mrs. Horton's School. A.D. 1787." This school was probably either at Springfield or at Longmeadow, where "Salla" lived. It is a little sampler, about eight inches square, done in her ninth year.

The next school that we know of was kept in Salem† by Mrs. Mehitable Higginson, the wife of Mr. John Higginson, Registrar of Deeds for Essex County. Mr. Higginson died just before the Revolution, and his wife and daughter Hetty were very outspoken and loyal supporters of King George. They were so unpopular that they went to Halifax, where they remained until 1782. Dr. Joseph Orne wrote of her to Colonel Timothy Pickering, on her return, "Your old friend, Mrs. Higginson, has returned, but as she is liable to be sent back and is quite as disagreeable to the people as any man would be, there is so great a ferment among them that she is obliged to live with her friends in Beverly."

She and her daughter opened a school in Salem as soon as the war was over. After her mother's death, in 1818, Miss Hetty kept her school for many years, but for younger children, and was much beloved by her pupils. It is said that Miss Hetty could divide a large strawberry among six or eight of her scholars, and that they were more pleased by this atom, given with her praise, than with a saucerful without her approbation. William Bentley, in his Diary, says that this "was the school of fashion for many years, till the infirmities of the mother prevented her better energies."

During this same period, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Rogers also kept a school for "young Ladies" in Salem. In the Holyoke Diaries is a very interesting and formal letter from them to Doctor and Mrs. Holyoke, dated November 6, 1794, in which they "inform them of their determination to relinquish the School which they have heretofore kept for the tuition of young Ladies." The reason was the "injury done to Mrs. ROGERS health by a Sedentary Employment" and "the duties which she owes to her family." The school was reopened in March, 1796.

Salem did not have an entire monopoly of good schools in Essex County, it seems, for in 1802, William Bentley notes with surprise the fact that during a dinner with Captain Gibaut he "assured me that a Mrs. Saunders keeps a school in Gloucester for young ladies, where needlework will bear comparison with any of the work of our Schools not excepting Mrs. Rogers of Salem." Gloucester had another teacher for many years. She finished her earthly career in 1814, and our diarist notes "another among the many Examples of longevity in School mistresses. Widow Hanna Tucker of Gloucester died Jan. present at Gloucester, æt. 91. For four generations school-mistresses. My school mistress, Madam Jenkins, lived many years over that age. Madam Babbidge of Salem, my next neighbor, lived & taught over 90 years of age. And a tag has been given me by M. Whitford, æt 80, which belonged to Madam Jiggles, marked EI, who was born on the passage to America & lived in the first framed house in Salem & who lived to a very advanced age & was a school mistress."

With the close of the eighteenth century the girl came into her own, and the "Female Academy" multiplied in the land. One of the earliest was at Bridgewater; it was founded in 1799. The building, burned in 1822, was fifty-four feet by twenty-seven, was two stories in height, and had a square tower which rose ten feet above the ridgepole. In 1807, Eliza Wentworth embroidered a sampler at the school, under Miss Martha Pullen, of Abington, who was then Preceptress.

Bradford Academy opened in 1803, and "originated from the sense of want which was felt in relation to education, especially female education." Leicester Academy and many others followed, and education for girls was an established fact. Mr. Littlefield tells us that in Boston, in 1817, there were one hundred and sixty-four private schools, and two thousand two hundred and eighteen girls attending. There were so many girls to educate that the academies would not hold them all; and as many of the conservative, distrusting advanced education, still sent their daughters to the finishing school, the two forms flourished side by side, as they have until this day. We are told that it was a mark of aristocracy in Salem to be admitted to one of these private schools. They were usually kept by some gentlewoman of diminished fortune, who taught the younger children of the better class reading, spelling, sewing, and, most of all, manners. Many a sampler was made in these schools, but the Salem samplers are so varied in their design as to render no grouping sufficiently sure to say that any two were made in the same school.

The result of comparing the descriptions of the samplers sent in is most interesting and intriguing. Many times you feel sure that certain girls must have worked their samplers side by side in school—and yet one can never be certain, because there were vaguely indefinite styles in samplers which pertained over a large part of the country, as there were in clothes. Some years ago there was an exhibition of samplers in an old house in Lowell, Massachusetts; it was not large, and yet two samplers hung side by side which were almost alike. It transpired afterward, when the owners met, that the two as girls had lived in Concord, and that the same teacher had instructed them both. The teacher apparently drew the pattern on the linen in ink, and as there were no ways in those days of transferring patterns, she did them free-hand, and she often set free her imagination at the same time. This would account both for their similarity and for their divergence.

Perhaps the most interesting example of this grouping of descriptions will be found in the samplers worked between 1785 and 1810 in Miss Polly Balch's Seminary in Providence, Rhode Island. It is a unique set of samplers; thirteen it is possible to be sure of, and there are a few more which were quite possibly done there also.

Five of these samplers contain a picture of the Old State House in Providence, or of old University Hall at Brown, and some contain both. The girls were always fairly accurate in the architecture of University Hall, but they were far less sure of the Old State House. The cupola rises and sinks in size, and the clock in the tower sometimes descends into the building itself. Nancy Hall and Sally Alger concentrated on University Hall, and add to the picture of the building the President's House. Above, each has given her idea of the First President's reception at the College. The President stands under curtains, looped back on either side with cords and enormous tassels. Below are pictured the guests on their way to the festivity. The two samplers are not identical, for one incloses hers with an oval, and the other, Sally Alger, uses the pseudo-classic arch, so very common to the samplers made in Miss Balch's School. The arch was echoed by Miss Sarah Stivour's School in Salem, Massachusetts, which was giving us another interesting group of samplers of the same period.

Miss Balch's School was responsible for the wonderful maritime scene done by Nancy Winsor, which is reproduced in color. (See Plates xlv, lxii, xcix, and c.)

Miss Mary Balch, known later variously as "Polly Balch" or "Marm Balch," was the second child of Timothy Balch, a Boston man, who had gone to Newport early in his career, and there married Sarah, daughter of Captain Joseph Rogers, of that city. The daughter Mary was born in Newport, February 9, 1762. Before she was twenty-three she had started a school in Providence, sometime before 1785. At one time the school was in George Street, for a paper of the time says that "A prominent private-school whose influence lasted many years, was opened on George Street early in 1800 or late in the previous century." The mystery is very puzzling as to just who the teacher was who made the delectable samplers coming from the school. Whoever it was who was responsible, certain it is that she was with Miss Balch from 1785 to 1800. About 1800, the character of those made in Miss Balch's School changes, if, as is probable, the representation of the First Baptist Church by Maria Hopping, and the two of the First Congregational Church, were the work of her pupils. The only other one which we are certain was done in her school, that of Eliza Pearce Jones, is a reversion to the usual type of sampler, hitherto not in the least characteristic of her school.

Strangely, there are two samplers, those of Anna Sanders, 1801, and Nancy Baker, 1808 (see Plate cviii), both made in Warren, which carry on the former tradition of Polly Balch's School. Therefore it seems probable that the sewing teacher was not Miss Balch herself, for Miss Balch's School continued in Providence till her death in 1831; and after that time it was carried on by one of her assistants, Miss Walker, for many years. In 1820, the school was at 427 and 429 North Main Street, in a building which is still standing. Miss Balch's gravestone in the North Burying Ground is still to be seen.

"Consecrated to the memory of Miss Mary Balch
the 1st to establish a female Academy in Providence
Who departed this life
Jan. 3rd, 1831, in her 69th year."

Whoever it was who taught needlework at Miss Balch's School, she certainly had by far a finer sense of what the art was capable of than any one who was in a like position. She had a sense of color, form, and design, and she taught her pupils to use their silks so that they not only made harmonious color, but they were applied in such a way as to bring out the luminosity of the silk. The backgrounds in many cases are entirely covered with a whitish silk in split-stitch, which gives a most wonderful sheen to the whole. She had certain mannerisms and certain forms of design, of which each sampler contains one or two, so that they are very easy to identify, even though they are not marked, and they are never commonplace. Aside from the Old State House, usually depicted with five windows on the façade, is a house with nine windows and a fence between the two chimneys. It has two dormer windows in the roof, and a long flight of steps on either side. Polly Turner, of Warren, made an example of this in 1786, at Miss Balch's School, and Anna Sanders made one in Warren in 1801. They are very alike all through, except for the style of dress in the people walking by the house and standing under the trees on either side. Nancy Baker again did it in Warren in 1808. Between these two extremes we find it on Susan Whitmore's sampler, which though undated was certainly made at Miss Balch's School. Again it appears on the funny little sampler of Frances Jones, 1789. Julia Lippit and Eliza Cozzens used the split-stitch background and the arch to frame baskets of fruit in wonderfully harmonious colors, and Susan Whitmore put a basket of fruit under her house and pseudo-classic arch. After 1800, the samplers which come from Miss Balch's School are less elaborate and have a less sure touch. None the less, nowhere else can so interesting a group of samplers be found as those coming from this school, where for many years the girls of the best Rhode Island families were taught.

But Miss Balch's School was the flowering of a rather barren twig. Rhode Island had not paid great heed to education, as far as girls were concerned, but private schools helped there as they did elsewhere. In 1758:

"Sarah Osborne, school mistress in Newport, proposes to keep a boarding school. Any person desirous of sending children may be accommodated and have them instructed in reading, writing, plain work, embroidery, tent stitch, samplers, &c. on reasonable terms."

It is sad to think that no Newport sampler of the date has so far come to hand. About 1770, private schools were few and far between; they were "but little thought of; there were in my neighborhood three small schools, perhaps about 12 scholars each. Their books were the Bible, spelling book and primer."* But in the end, Miss Balch and her numerous rivals changed all this, and gave the Rhode Island girls as good an education as the times considered necessary.

Of Connecticut schools for girls we know but little, and yet there must have been very good ones quite early, if we are to judge by Margaret Calef's wonderful scene which she worked in 1767. (See Plate xxiii.) The perspective and architecture might perhaps be considered odd, for certainly neither the man nor the animals could possibly get inside the house. But sampler land is a very different country from ours, and there the impossible happens every day; so why not enjoy the gorgeousness of a poppy bigger than a poplar tree, and consider it in the light of a perpetual sunset? Samplers come from all the towns which we of later days associate with seats of learning—Middletown, Farmington, New Haven, Hartford.

In 1791, Mrs. Mansfield had a school in New Haven, where Lydia Church embroidered a sampler. One is tempted to think that she made a picture of her school, for that same year Elizabeth Lyon also embroidered a "picture of an old girls school on State Street," and in both ladies and "gentlemen with crooked sticks" walk about, and in each is a flock of sheep.

In Litchfield, Connecticut, "Miss Sarah Pierce opened a School in this town for the instruction of Females in the year 1792, which has very justly merited and acquired a distinguished reputation." The school was opened with one pupil in the dining-room of her house, but it soon grew. The diaries of two girls who went there as day scholars have been printed, and they give the impression of a rather casual attendance. During 1797 and 1798, both girls embroidered shawls, so that the work that they did upon their samplers was not wasted. The first building was made in 1798, and in 1827 it was incorporated as the "Litchfield Female Academy." Miss Pierce maintained the school for forty years. In 1802, Nancy Hale, of Glastonbury, who was a pupil in the school, wrote her sisters a letter which gives a far better picture of what a school was in those days than can we, who only imagine.

Dear Sisters

Miss Sophia Hale informs me that she expects her Parents in Litchfield tomorrow who are going directly on to G—y* and she with them & I very soon have retired from my studies to enquire after your health & that of all friends. My Dreams often present me with you enjoying great happiness; but I awake & find it nothing but the visionary fancies of a Dream; not that I am by any means Home-sick tho I wish to hear from their very much indeed. I spend my time very agreeably am very much engaged about my Picture. C Smith began one when she first came here like mine but I have got some ways before her I shall endeavor to be as diligent as possible. I have visited a few times, Miss Pierce gave me an invitation to visit her last Fryday and several others; their was 40 that drank tea in one room at one time; Their was some Gentlemen came in the afternoon and gave us all an invitation to attend a Ball that Evening the greatest part of us attended. Miss P. approves of our dancing very much she says that we set so much that it is very necessary that we should dance sometimes for exercise. Besides Embroidering I study Geography and write Composition I get my lessons in Evening. she does not allow any one to Embroider without they attend to some study for she says she wishes to have them ornament their minds when they are with her.

Parson Morgan of Canaan call'd on me this Afternoon and brought me a Letter from Nancy M. he says that our Friends are all well their & he gave me a very polite invitation to go that way when I go home & make his daughter a visit. He is now on his way to N. Haven— I shall expect a Letter when S. Hale returns, for her Parents are going to leave her here when they return. I hope to finish my Picture before I return home which I hope you will let me stay as long as you possibly are willing Vacation is either 2 or 7 weekes from now their has several left the School since I have been here 2 young Ladies that board in the House with me that are going home tomorrow the school being so much less makes it much better for us that are here. their has been 70 in the School since I have been here but there is two Miss Pierces who assist in the School. If the wether continues as cold as it is now (as very probably it will be) I wish you to bring my Habit when you come after me. Last Sunday we all wore woolen Shawls and several wore cloaks to Meeting and there was several that carried Muffs. As we leave New England, we embark on more uncharted seas, for we leave the familiar English school to encounter those of other nations. So it gives us quite a shock to find that the Dutch were far more liberal in their attitude toward educating girls than were our English ancestors.

Dame Schools were very common in Holland at the time when the Dutch came to New York, but the records are silent as to whether they brought their Dame Schools with them or not. An author tells us that "a continuation of discreet ignorance seems the wisest course" in discussing them. The school dame was not an early product of Dutch New Netherlands, except that the summer school, if it consisted of less than twenty children, might be taught by the schoolmaster's wife. The parochial school seems to have taken in both boys and girls. In 1698, they appear to have had a sort of contest, in which forty-four boys and twenty-one girls took part, in repeating psalms, hymns, etc. Dr. Selyns reported that "the girls though fewer in number, had learned and recited more in proportion than the boys." The girls evidently had their intellects much better attended to in New York than in New England, but the needle, alas! was neglected, for almost no Dutch samplers done in New York have come down to us. The early New York samplers all come from Long Island, where the English influence was strong. The only exception is the sampler of Catherine Van Schaick "out 10", worked "Jaer 1763", in Albany. It is a very plain little sampler, but most interesting, as it stands almost alone.

New York also had finishing schools, as did all the other large cities up and down the coast. Before 1800, the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends of the State of New York had opened a boarding school. The real name of the school was so long that, like other Quaker schools, it went by a nickname, and was called the "Nine Partners' Boarding School". There the same patterns were used as those at the other Quaker school at West Town, Pennsylvania. The designs are quite simple, and run to scattered flowers and geometric figures. These latter are most often in the form of half hexagons along the edge of the sampler, and have a Dutch or German effect. Another school in New York had the interesting name of "African Free School." Rosena Disery made a sampler at this school in 1820. The sampler was seen in a shop, and unfortunately nothing beyond the name of the girl and the name of the school were reported.

New Jersey offers us the earliest sampler with a teacher's name upon it. Hannah Foster, of Evesham, records in 1743, "Elizabeth Sullivan taught me." The state also had so many schools that one might think that all education in the early nineteenth century centered around Philadelphia and the adjacent coasts of New Jersey. Though the schools were many and all of them enticed the girls on in the art of sampler making, the result as a whole was not thrilling. The samplers are nearly all very simple. In fact, only two of the collection stand out as interesting. In 1808, Eliza F. Budd made an elaborate picture of the Court House at Mount Holly, New Jersey, and crowned the corners and the top of the hip roof with noble urns. Beneath, on the Court House terraces, Ruth gleaned the sheaves of Boaz; and on the other side of the approach, King David tends his flocks. And overhead fly birds, quite undisturbed that they are living both in Palestine and New Jersey at the same time.*

The reason for the great numbers of schools in Pennsylvania and New Jersey was that the Society of Friends believed in education; but again, alas! in the early days, not in the education of girls. Female education was limited to the bare understanding of the rudiments. Many have deplored the lack of letters from Colonial women; the lack was not in preserving them, for the absence of letters is the direct result of insufficient education. It is most amusing, as one reads the educational history of each state, to see how each author in turn calls the period of 1700–1750 one of “gloom and darkness.” New Jersey made a struggle in the right direction, but it apparently was a very real struggle. There was a young ladies’ seminary in Elizabethstown in 1789, but it soon failed. Two years later a French school was opened to teach the fashionable accomplishments, but no permanent school resulted.

In 1808, Red Bank, a farm belonging to Barnes Smock, was made into a school, whose first teacher was George Morford. In 1825, Mary Ann Burroughs embroidered a sampler at the school and marked it so. The school was made an Academy in 1830, and is or was the most important industrial school in Monmouth County. The Evesham School, which, as we know from the samplers, flourished from 1808 to 1820, at least, furnishes us with a very interesting example of the fact that the schools in Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania used common designs. In 1808, Julia Haines, at the Evesham School, used the same flattened oval wreath, a single stitch in width, which the Bristol and Pleasant Hill Boarding Schools employed, and which the North School, Philadelphia, used in even simpler form. Outside this she embroidered a border which is distinctly reminiscent of many which are found on the samplers from the West Town School.

Pennsylvania, very early, thanks to the Moravians, had schools which seem to have taught even the girls some sort of learning. In 1746, the sect founded a school at Lititz, near Bethlehem, in Lancaster County. The school was in the midst of the community, and one suspects was at first only for the children of the Moravians. It had early a national reputation, and was later known as Linden Hall Seminary.

In 1799, Mr. John C. Ogden, “Presbyter in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States,” printed a book called “An Excursion into Bethlehem of Nazareth, in Pennsylvania.” One is led by the title to expect other things, but our learned presbyter certainly took his expedition in almost the same spirit in which he might if he had gone to more sacred lands.

He found things much to his taste in this Moravian settlement, and it may have been the seal of his approval which later led good little Episcopalians like our sampler maker to go to this school.

Having gone to the boys' school, our traveler next visited the girls'.

"The hour being convenient for visiting the girls school, so much celebrated, a pleasing groupe appeared in different rooms, under the care of their tutresses, where they learn reading, writing, arithmetic, embroidery, drawing, and music.

Since the application to receive pupils from abroad, have become so frequent and numerous, a new building has been erected for their use, upon a similar model, with the sisters house. A small courtyard, or grass plat, is between these buildings.

In the rear of this, is another small enclosure, which forms a broad grass walk, and is skirted on each side by beds devoted to flowers, which the girls cultivate as their own."

The visitor goes on to explain that the teachers are in no respect like nuns, but nevertheless the "instructresses are treated with due respect. All females are educated by them." Then when he has seen all that there was to see, read their books, and enjoyed their hospitality, he ends enthusiastically with these words:

"The whole system is well calculated to make mankind wiser and better; to ameliorate the conditions of the untutored, and correct the devious: It softens the rugged temper, and expands the benevolent heart."

With this seal of approval from a high dignitary of her church, is it any wonder that some twenty years later Catherine Jones Elder was sent there, so that the good influences of the place might be very strongly felt? Catherine was seven, and was sent to Lititz to recover from an unfortunate love affair! A schoolmate had written her a love-letter, and the occasion was felt by her family to demand a separation of the lovers. She made two samplers at the school, one in 1826 and one in 1827. Tradition does not tell whether these very youthful lovers were faithful or not.

Rather earlier than most, the Society of Friends discerned the great lack of education among girls and its consequent retarding force on the growth of the nation. Pennsylvania had had schools perhaps of the same sort that were prevalent farther north, but Philadelphia had no boarding schools until the Revolution. In 1770, Mr. Griscom advertised his private "Academy" at the North End of Philadelphia; but until Mr. Horton started the idea of a separate school for girls in 1795, education for them had been purely ornamental. The same year, Poor's "Academy for young ladies" was at No. 9 Cherry Street.

The Society of Friends carried Mr. Horton's idea out, but in a different form. The "Philadelphia Yearly Meeting" started a school in 1794, to give children "a guarded religious education." The land was purchased at West Town the next year, and in 1796 the school was founded, and the brick building a hundred feet long by fifty-six wide was built. It was three stories high, as Martha Heuling's sampler pictures it for us. In 1799, "5 mo 6", it opened with twenty pupils of both sexes, but by midwinter boasted a hundred of each. From that time on, the school was in continuous session for thirty-seven years, without a single vacation. Scholars entered at any time for a year or more. The sexes were kept strictly apart in the early years. It is somewhat of an indication of the popularity of the school that we have sixteen samplers which were known to have been made there between 1802 and 1820. Of these, ten are distinctly plain, usually showing a vine or conventional border, with a verse—true Quaker plainness. Two show a rather German influence, as they are covered with detached sprays of flowers, like Susanna Cox's (see Plate xciv). Martha Heuling portrayed the first building of the school. Her sampler is, unfortunately, dim with age, and as a consequence the reproduction is quite vague. There were other forms of samplers done in the school. One is in white blocks two inches square,* with the maker's name and the date in black; another is entirely in blue;† while a third has the lettering done with pen and ink.‡ (See Plate cxiii.)

The game of matching descriptions is quite exciting when brought to bear on the Philadelphia collection, though the result is not very definite. From 1796 to 1828, some school in Philadelphia evidently specialized on houses and scenes. Two of the earlier, Susan Lehman's and Hetty Lees', both done in 1799, show half a house on the left, trees, a fence, and half a barn. Thereafter follows a somewhat long line of houses, with weeping willows, poplars, sheep, cattle, men, and women. The sky is sometimes filled with small flowers; one has the sun, one the stars with the sun, and three the American Eagle with outspread wings. They are none of them actually alike, but they give the impression that one mind, having conceived a general type,* used it in varying forms. Another interesting fact develops by this comparison. The Pleasant Hill Boarding School and the Bristol School evidently exchanged patterns; and Mary Hamilton, who went to Mrs. Welchan's School at Maytown, Pennsylvania, in 1812, and Ann E. Kelly, who went to Mrs. Leah Meguire's School, in Harrisburg, in 1825, embroidered samplers whose form is almost identical. The North School, in Philadelphia, echoes in a much simpler form that used by the Pleasant Hill and Bristol Schools.

William Penn provided for education in Delaware, which seemed to his mind most important in order that "all wicked and scandalous living may be prevented and that youth may be successively trained in virtue, and useful knowledge and arts."

It was also agreed that all children of the age of twelve years "shall be taught some useful trade or skill to the [end that] none may be idle, so the poor could may be work to live and the rich if they became poor, may not want."† In his last lines to his wife, William Penn exhorts her to let his "children be husbandmen and housewives; it is industrious, healthy, honest and of good example." In order to gain this result, she is "to spare no cost" for their education.

Penn's high ideals, like those of our Pilgrim and Puritan ancestors, had no long duration in fact; and Delaware fell a prey, as did the other colonies, to the period of "gloom and darkness" which held sway until the middle of the eighteenth century.

The Swedes founded schools early in the eighteenth century where they endeavored to educate both boys and girls. In 1717, a school was opened in the house of Johan Gustafsson, in Christiana, Delaware, and the schoolmaster examined the children sent to him. There were eleven scholars, of whom five were girls, whose capabilities were duly recorded by Mr. Gioding:

Mary Geens, 9 years old, can read Swedish and say the Ten Commandments.

Mans Gustaf's daughter Anika, 6 years old can spell Swedish tolerably well.

Anders Gustaf's daughter, Catherina, 12 years old, can read in a book, but must begin to learn to spell right.

Margaretta, the late Peter Stalcop's daughter, 11 years old, reads Swedish indifferently well, but must learn to spell anew.

Annika, Anders Gustaf's daughter, 8 years old, can spell a little.

The girls were not so far behind the boys in education, and when the school ended the next year, it was so wonderful a success as to bring tears to the parents' eyes.

The English schools of the same time seem to have been in a much worse way. The Rev. George Ross, in a sketch of the history of his church at New Castle, Delaware, described the condition of education in 1727. "There are some private schools within my reputed district which are put very often into the hands of those who are brought into the country and sold for servants. Some school masters are hired by the year by a knot of families who in their turns entertain him monthly and the poor man lives in their houses like one that begged an alms, more than like a person in credit and authority. When a ship arrives in the river it is a common expression with those who stand in need of an instructor for their children, 'let us go and buy a school master.' The truth is, the office and character of such a person is generally very mean and contemptible here, but it cannot be otherwise 'til the public takes the education of children into their mature consideration.'"*

This dismal period and dismal education eventually came to an end, and with it the girls' education arose to what was normal throughout the colonies. During the Revolution, John Thelwell had a famous school in Wilmington. His first school was at the foot of Quaker Hill, but he soon moved to the little Senate Chamber over the Market House,† at the corner of King and Third Streets. Most boys and girls were his pupils, at least during part of their school days. The attitude of the times toward girls' education is still quite evident, from the fact that the boys went in the front door, and the girls had to go through a side door up an alley. Miss Debby Thelwell, his eldest daughter, had charge of the girls. Her sister, Miss Polly, was too timid to teach, but after their father's death the two sisters carried on the school for many years.

In 1785, Ann Askew had a school for girls in Wilmington, where Ann Tatnall embroidered a sampler, which resembles in a marked degree those of about 1730. Nineteen years later, her daughter, Eliza Tatnall Sipples, embroidered her sampler at the "Southern Boarding School" in Wilmington. Later the Wilmington Boarding School, which lasted from 1813 to 1824, taught the girls in that city the gentle arts. (See Plate cxi.)

Again, we are disturbed because there is a definite bond of type between samplers. The first pair might easily be put down to family taste. Susannah James, in 1788, and Mary James, in 1798, embroidered their samplers, not entirely alike, but distinctly of the same sort. The other pair is more remarkable. Sarah Bancroft, in 1795 (see Cover), and Sally Brierly, in 1828, thirty-three years apart, each embroidered the same church upon her sampler. That coincidence would not be extremely remarkable except for the fact that the two are almost identical, stitch for stitch. Sally Brierly did not add the scene in front, with the pond, boat, and swans, but she made the groundwork of her sampler more ornate.

On Second Street, Wilmington, from 1790 on, Mrs. Elizabeth Way kept a school. She "was a celebrated teacher of needlework, so important for misses in those times that even the art of shirt-making was strictly attended to; the fitting and cutting were taught here with neatness and care. Most of the older females brought up in this town have been her pupils. Mrs. Way was a very respectable and worthy woman. She had received an education superior to most women of her day and was endowed with a strong mind and strict principles of morality; yet an irritable temper was a drawback to her usefulness and it was annoying to some of her pupils. She was a disciplinarian of the old school and strictly adhered to the wise king's advice. A bunch of switches of eat-o'-nine-tails were freely used to correct the naughty.

"Leather spectacles were worn for slighted work. Much attention was paid to the position, for if the head leaned down Jamestown-weed burs strung on tape were ready for a necklace; or if a person stooped a steel was at hand—this was the length of the waist—and held up the chin by a piece extending around the neck, and a strap confined it down. It was not very comfortable to the wearer, though fitted to make the 'crooked ways straight', but a morocco spider worn on the back confined to the shoulders by a belt was more usual.

"The celebrated painter, Benjamin West, had been a companion of Mrs. Way's childhood and youth. As absent friends they kept up a correspondence and it seemed much pleasure to her to relate anecdotes of his early days."

In 1797, Mr. Crips built the house called the "Old Boarding School." Here, a few years later, Mrs. Capron, who had had a school in Philadelphia, came and taught the young ladies of Wilmington. She was succeeded by Joshua Maule and Eli Hilles. After Mr. Maule died, Samuel Hilles joined his brother, and the school was continued by one or both until about 1832.

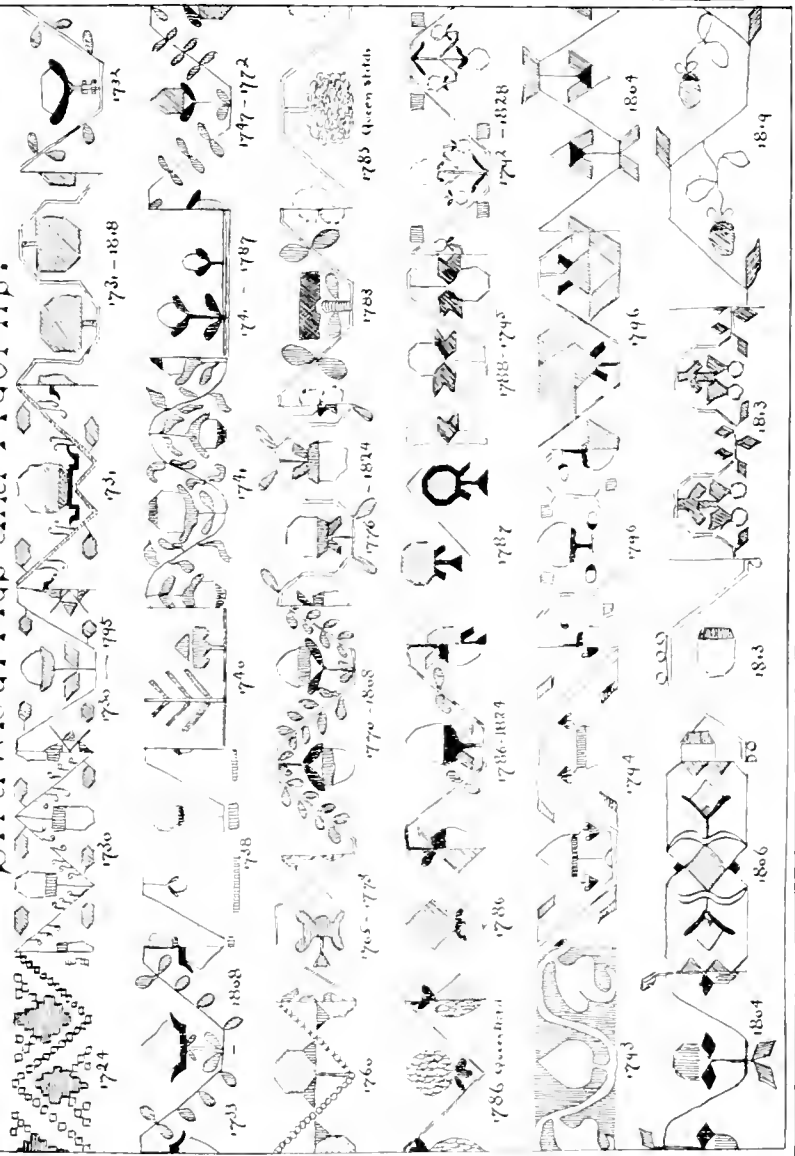

Delaware and Maryland children, both boys and girls, we are told, were often sent abroad to English schools, and many must have had private tutors, because plantation life meant that there were, outside the cities, fewer towns than there were in the more northern states. The southern cities, however, furnished the same sort of "finish" to girls that the northern cities did. The following advertisement might as easily have emanated from Boston as from Annapolis:

"MARY SALISBURY proposes keeping school in Annapolis, at the house where Mr. Sparrow lived, near the church, to teach young ladies French and all sorts of fine needlework, tapestry, embroidery with gold and silver, and every other curious work which can be performed with a needle, and all education fit for young ladies except dancing."*

Sirawberries and Acorns.

The Chesterfield School seems to have existed quite early, for we have samplers marked with the school name from 1795 to 1821.* Teresia Fenwick had a governess, Eleanor Norland, and the sampler done under her care is the only one so far reported which has a Calvary Cross upon it. Mary Robertson may also have been a governess; certainly if the two samplers done under her care are any criterion, she was well beloved, for her pupils gave her their samplers, and she recorded the gift with words of praise and affection. The childish heart is hard to know, and the childish mind is sometimes quite canny in its reading of adult character. Perhaps "the two dear girls" were flatterers, and had gauged Miss Robertson's gullibility. Only one other school in Maryland is known, Mary Walden's, in Baltimore, where, in 1818, Caroline Vaughan embroidered a sampler.

Virginia samplers hardly exist before the nineteenth century, if the records so far gathered are of any value as proof, and there is no school recorded among them. We do know, however, that in 1811 Amelia Hough and Mary Lawrence were the teachers of Amy Ann Phillips, of Waterford, Virginia.

North Carolina boasted a Female Academy at Salem, at least as early as 1805. It was a Moravian school, and, judging the rest of the education by the very elaborate sampler done by Dovey Winslow Wilson while a student, they must have given the girls a very fair knowledge. They allowed her to use not only embroidery, but pen and ink, and oil painting for the face of the mourning woman. And Hillsboro had a school in 1828, where Mary T. Lindsay, of Greensboro, embroidered a simple sampler.

The states to the south give us no inkling at all as to how their girls were educated, for they record neither teachers nor schools upon the rather meager collection of descriptive blanks which have come to hand. Perhaps the Pennsylvania schools received their share of pupils, and governesses and mothers taught the rest. Kentucky seems to have awakened to the academy idea when all the more northern states did, and Ohio had one school at least, at Waynesville, as early as 1807.

* Jane Henderson, Abigail and Margaret Decon.

On the whole, it is quite surprising to find how large a contribution to the history of girls' education these samplers furnish. While the information is meager in itself, it still gives an impetus to the inquiring mind to find out the condition of our forebears; and of course it increases our feeling of smug satisfaction that we of the present day are not as they were, but quite emancipated from the dominating intellect and erudition of man.

MATERIALS, DESIGNS, STITCHES

IN 1738, Sarah Troup embroidered on her sampler, "Let none despise the criss-eross row." It is in this spirit that we would have our readers approach the consideration of the material, design, and stitehery of the sampler. For we are here not considering great works of art, but the spontaneous growth of a handicraft in a very young civilization.

Of the three subjects under discussion, the first is by far the easiest to approach, for we have a very solid foundation in the fact that the greater number of samplers in all periods were worked upon linen. The English writers on samplers tell us that the early hand-loom wove linen but eight or nine inches wide, and adduce from the fact the reason that the early sampler was long and narrow. Perhaps that may have been the case with those very earliest examples, which have so completely disappeared, but a study of the seventeenth century sampler does not bear out the contention. Very many of the samplers of that period have the selvage at the top and bottom. The continental looms were much broader than the English, and the linen for these samplers was evidently imported. Perhaps the truth is that the narrow English loom, and the fact that eight inches was amply wide to accommodate the ordinary repeat pattern, set the style. So the English embroiderer was bound by convention to the narrow form, even though the wide continental linen allowed more freedom in shape and size. Gradually, as the English wove wider linen, the long sampler gave place to the square, and the latter quarter of the eighteenth century saw the final passing of the narrow type. In the latter part of the seventeenth century, the English began to use a mustard colored linen, not very attractive to our modern taste. Toward the middle of the eighteenth century it became quite common. This material was not so much used in America, though there are some examples. The American linen, of the same color, was coarser and rougher than the English.

which was often quite fine enough for the making of lace samplers. We, on the other hand, sometimes used a dark green linen, which is at times mournful and at times artistic. The two Brierly sisters used a light blue.

We have the record of one sampler done on brown linen in different shades of brown and dark green. The result must be rather monotonous and subdued. The linen used was not always the plain homespun which forms the background of the great majority, for once in a while the more elaborately woven "bird's-eye" linen was used. Elizabeth Lea, who lived in Delaware, embroidered on this kind of linen in 1752.

Some of the early samplers were bound with silk tape. Hannah Wiggins did it in 1730; and the habit was never quite abandoned, though the later ribbons were sometimes put on with gathers, and were generally wider than Hannah Wiggins's, which was only half an inch wide. Many put rosettes in the corners, and some children sewed their samplers to paper. Perhaps these were ancient forms of passe-partout, and used when parents were too poor or too indifferent to frame the children's work.

Another background was used in England, called "catgut," a kind of canvas, but whether we in America ever used it or not is quite difficult to answer. I fancy that the material is not well known, because in the "Vicar of Wakefield," where a young lady was spoken of as "flourishing upon catgut," most people inferred that she played the violin. One critic, however, discovered that she did no such unmaidenly act. This was merely another way of saying that she did embroidery on canvas, with "flourishing thread," which is a flat, very shiny linen thread. "Flourishing" was advertised to be taught in Boston as early as 1716.

The English began, about 1750, to use tammy cloth and, sad to say, some of our ancestors also used it. This, being of wool, did all the evil things it could: it shrank, it curled, and it furnished food for moths. The stuff itself resembles mohair in its sheen, and was probably chosen because the threads were more even than in linen, and finer in quality. The sampler, when just finished, was probably much more symmetrical and perhaps more attractive than one done on linen. Cotton was sometimes used, but never imparted an elegant appearance. Canary canvas and Penelope canvas were used in the nineteenth century. The finest samplers were embroidered on bolting-cloth, a very transparent woolen gauze, used to bolt flour. This form of sampler was, of course, as useful as food for moths as were those on tammy cloth, and as a result many lovely ones have regrettable holes. Satin was sparingly used for samplers proper, being as a rule reserved for the "mourning pieces," with tombs, willow trees, and mourning shepherdesses. Satin was better for these doleful pictures because usually the tombs and their inscriptions were painted in, and satin was a better medium than anything else for the combination of paint and embroidery. One sampler at least was made on "lute-string" silk. A few of the samplers in Providence, Rhode Island, by a skillful running of blue silk thread from the back, give the effect of a combination of silk and linen that is very charming and quite misleading, if only the right side is seen.

The thread that was used, whatever its nature—silk, linen, wool, or cotton—was always home dyed, and so the resulting color was dependent upon the taste and skill of the dyer. The colors were made from our native herbs, from log-wood, cochineal, and indigo from overseas, from saffron, from the planta genesta, which gave its name to a line of Kings, and which now runs wild in Essex County, Massachusetts.

Linen thread was sometimes used, and crewels are known on samplers as early as 1686, but neither of these threads ever really rivalled silk as a medium. Crewels appear somewhat sporadically. Alice Woodwell, of Newburyport, in 1760, used them, and so did Betty Tippet in 1774. This latter sampler is the most remarkable that has come to be recorded. It is about six feet long and ten inches wide, and done on rather heavy cotton. The whole is divided into squares, and on each is a crewel-worked flower, fern, or branch. Across the top, running the whole length of the sampler, is embroidered in cross-stitch the verse, "Betty Tippet is my name, and with my needle I wrought the same" etc., with her age, eighteen, and the year, 1774.

Some of the silk thread on our American samplers shows a queer kinkiness, which looks as if it had been twisted in large hanks, and later unravelled to finer thread for use. Some of this silk is on samplers which can be traced back to Essex County, Massachusetts, particularly to the environs of Salem, whence ships went to all parts of the world. The hint has come to us that such silk can be seen in Japan and China, and so we wonder whether these Essex County maidens were not using early spoils from the Orient, brought overseas by Yankee captains. The Dutch of Pennsylvania also used it, and they were traders, too.

The effect of this kinky silk is very attractive, and gives a more interesting surface than the smooth or tightly twisted silks. It is nearly always used in very long stitches,* couched sometimes, and sometimes left free. All the threads they used were wound on cardboard "stars," or on those lovely ivory winders that our merchants brought from China. Most of our great-grandmothers used a gold thimble, which they had inherited, cherished, and handed down till the top was so worn as to let the needle through, instead of pushing it, as its duty was. Some of them had no top at all, like a tailor's thimble. Sometimes chenille was added to make the sampler more elaborate, but this was general only after 1800.

As we turn to design we are already plunged into the midst of a controversy, which depends so much more on tradition than on fact, that it seems in a fair way to continue forever. This is the controversy as to the origin of English design. With a rather grim lack of confidence in English ability to evolve things artistic, the experts seek foreign influence for everything. Some say it is all Italian, and others, looking to broader fields, contend that Holland, Spain, France, Persia, and the other countries may also have contributed. Again some English experts agree that the purely lace sampler antedates those in colored work, while others maintain that those that have the isolated designs in color are the oldest of all. As there are none at all that can be dated with accuracy until about 1610, when Anne Gower, the wife of Governor Endecott, of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, made hers, neither side can prove its claim. So it will be better to say that these three kinds exist, separate often, and oftentimes all upon the same sampler.

The lace sampler certainly was very early, and was the earliest to disappear. Tradition tells us that Catherine of Aragon taught the Bedfordshire women punto tagliato, and whether the tradition is true or not, that form appears very early, combined with punto tirato and some filet. Punto tagliato is lace made on linen, where both the warp and the woof are removed; punto tirato is also made on linen, where the threads are drawn, but part of the warp and woof remain to be used as a background. With filet we are all familiar.

The lace sampler, of either kind, was always exquisitely done, particularly about the middle of the seventeenth century, which seems to mark the crest of the wave of all sampler work. These lace samplers contained repeating designs, in almost every case, and so they were worked in bands across the linen. The punto tagliato was often enhanced by raised petals of flowers,* and the coats and draperies on small human figures made separately and sewed on. This was not often done in America, but perhaps it is unfair to generalize too much on the few American seventeenth century samplers that remain to us. One always has the feeling that there must have been many more, but that the Indian wars, with their burning houses, and the destruction which comes of careless and indifferent owners through two centuries and more, have diminished them most unfortunately. The lace sampler as developed by the English showed designs that were beautiful and varied, and had real distinction. We in America in the seventeenth century fell rather below the best English level. Our samplers were somewhat shorter, and were not always as elaborate in design.

Turning now to the embroidered design, we find that the seventeenth and the early eighteenth centuries give us two kinds, one done in white, and one in color. The white embroidery was nearly always done in satin-stitch, in repeating geometric designs. Anne Gower's* sampler is a good example in the seventeenth century, and Grace Tay's† in the eighteenth. This form fell into disuse about the time that the lace sampler did, so that its history in America was nearly over in 1720. We seldom find white thread used in the later samplers, except in darning or stocking stitch. Mary Gill's‡ sampler, done in white cotton, is an illustration of its later use.

In the seventeenth century the designs in color were most complicated and elaborate, and the stitches used were many. The designs were always conventionalized flowers or fruits, partly because the angular cross-stitch and tent-stitch were the most common means of expression, and partly because a repeating motif demanded it. The commonest designs were the rose, "Indian pink," trefoil, strawberry, acorn, and the "Tree of Life." These and others were mixed into most complicated combinations. The designs are sometimes so conventionalized that their origin is lost in obscurity. In addition, there were patterns of a purely geometric character. The popularity of the acorn is supposed to have arisen from King Charles's adventure in the "Boscabelle Oak." Be this as it may, the acorn and strawberry were soon so distorted from their pristine form that it is a bold person who would say with definiteness which is which. Strawberry and acorn became so conventionalized that they resembled each other more than they resembled their original. Two other designs on these early samplers are worth a word, for both so suddenly disappear. The first are the famous "boxers," which can be seen on Elizabeth Robert's§ sampler. Of course, their pose is not the least like a boxer's, though their attitude is always the same. They vary only in what they hold in their upraised hand. They are akin in reality to the Greek Erotes, and the Renaissance Cupids. The second is a design which may be seen in Mary Hudson's|| sampler near the middle, which resembles an S on a V-shaped running design. This is called by some the "Stuart S," but another critic, still grudging to England any originality, shows this same design on an Italian towel of an earlier period.

These seventeenth and early eighteenth century samplers are less interesting from a pictorial point of view than many that succeeded them, but from the point of view of design, of use, and of needlework, they make the latter hide their diminished heads.

With the coming of the eighteenth century, many changes came to the American sampler. The original use had passed away, and the new sampler was an exercise for children, and had no longer a place in the maiden's dower chest. So both in England and America the complicated and lovely repeat designs were abandoned, and after a dreary period of alphabets, horn-book style, we emerge again with a new form, with new designs, founded on the old ones, but simplified for childish fingers. In the sampler which contained alphabets only, the cross-border lingered in a debased state, becoming a simple row of cross-stitch or Greek fret, a poor substitute for its former glory. So the sampler, originally made to fix and retain a pattern for later use, was now become a childish exhibition of skill. In England the result was what one writer calls a "thoroughly mixed affair," with isolated bits of pattern strewn across its surface.

About 1725 the border became a frame, and matching the corners tortured the childish mind and fingers. So about this time the old English cross-borders reappear in simple form, and again strawberry, "Indian pink," rose, tulip, and the rest bloom modestly upon our samplers. It would be interesting to know whence these new patterns sprung, for they are entirely lacking in the elaborateness of the earlier century. Yet it seems as if they must, even in earlier days, have lingered somewhere in the background, for the English and American borders of this period resemble each other in their general appearance too closely not to have been developed from a common source. Perhaps after all it was only a combination of nature and the exigencies of an angular stitch which forced both nations to a common result.

Drawings have been made from the many pictures which we have,

and from available samplers, of the strawberry, "Indian pink," rose,* and other flowers as they appear chronologically upon the samplers. This was done with the hope that in some way the series would show development, but the hope was an ignis fatuus. No particular evolution is traceable in any of the various forms. Often the same type persists through a long period, and some are never even approximately repeated. The Rhode Island School of Design at Providence owns a sampler made in 1730 by Abigail Pinniger.† It is lovely, though unfinished, and is an example of the hesitation between the new eighteenth century and the old seventeenth century types. It has one cross-border of rose, which was echoed with marvelous exactitude fifty-three years later, when Ann Almy‡ made her sampler in 1783. Moreover, she copied the earlier type of sampler, containing nothing but cross-borders throughout, and without the date to guide us it would inevitably be put in the earlier period. All of which goes to prove that those who would date samplers which have no date must not be too sure, but should add that saving clause with which we swear, "to the best of my knowledge and belief." This same amazing persistence in type may be seen if one examines the samplers of Sarah Howell, of Philadelphia, in 1731, and Ann Tatnall, of Wilmington, Delaware, in 1785. The arrangement is the same; both are framed by "Indian pink." While the cross-borders are not identical, they differ no more than would the borders on the samplers of two girls, embroidered under the same teacher. (See Plate cxi.)

The earlier borders, done in cross-stitch, follow the angular lines which the stitch demands, but very soon some of the children shook off the shackles of the stitch, and less stiff vines of a combined satin and stem-stitch came into favor. The cross-stitch border was, however, never abandoned. So passion-flowers and forget-me-nots rioted on the same vine, and blue roses vied with green pinks upon the same parent stem. We find lovely grapevines and morning glory borders in the nineteenth century; in fact, there were few flowers which were sufficiently simple to copy which were not used. The cross-border of the olden time had entirely passed away in the nineteenth century, or survived only like a thin and tired ghost in the bare cross-stitch division lines between the letters of the alphabet.

Just before the Revolution there was a revival of the lace sampler, this time in "hollie point." Jane Humphreys* (1763) and Mary Clark† (1783) are both good examples of this work. In 1783 we find, too, a drawnwork sampler, and a little later "darned lace"‡ samplers came into vogue. At about this same time there was a tendency, shown best, perhaps, in Sarah Bancroft's sampler (see Cover), to outline the design in black or some dark color. Appha Woodman§ did it, not in cross-stitch, but stem-stitch. Others who copied this method of accentuating the design were Mary J. Condon and Mehitabel Foster. The custom never became popular.

The nineteenth century designs echoed those of the century before and added some new ones. In a few instances they elaborated the common forms to almost the same degree that the seventeenth century workers did, but less elegantly.

The stitches that were used throughout the whole period are few; cross-stitch, tent-stitch or petit-point, satin-stitch, and eyelet pretty much comprise the list. Cross-stitch and tent-stitch, with their kindred tapestry stitches learned from the older embroideries, were the foundation. The seventeenth century added back-stitch, which is much like the hand-stitching that our grandmothers did, and rope-stitch, which is done in the opposite direction to stem-stitch, making a more solid line. All through the period the square eyelet-stitch vied in popularity with cross-stitch for making alphabets, and few indeed were the samplers which did not contain one alphabet worked in it. Satin-stitch, originally used mostly in white embroidery, had great vogue in the eighteenth century in making a saw-tooth border-frame for the alphabets, inside the more elaborate floral one. Queen-stitch next came into vogue, and was used, though rather sparingly, until the sampler perished.

EMBROIDERED ARMS OF THE GILBERT FAMILY
Owened by Mrs. Horatio J. Gilbert

During about a decade, at the time of the Revolution, Sarah Stivour, who had a school near or in Salem, used a long-stitch to indicate sky, clouds, and grass.* These stitches were sometimes two or three inches in length, and were always placed diagonally. The outer edge was irregular, and upon this were perched men, women, and sheep. Sometimes the sheep disporting thereon have the aspect of drowning in a dark green sea.

As one contemplates the millions of stitches worked by these young girls, one wonders what their thoughts were as they sewed them. Children are conventional and conservative beings, and so, perhaps, the universality of the employment kept most from boredom. But there must always have been a residuum of the discouraged, and of the rebels "who hated every stitch," and so made their samplers badly or left them unfinished if they could possibly shirk their task. A plodding schoolmistress, whose whole artistic horizon was bordered by alphabets and numerals, must have been torture to an imaginative child, who saw all nature to mimic with her colored threads.

EMBROIDERED HERALDRY

REVENGEFUL LAERTES, speaking of his father's funeral, said that

“No Trophée, Sword, nor Hatchment o'er his bones
No Noble rite, nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard.”

When Shakespeare lived, respect for the dead was to be shown in no small measure by display at the funeral. The dramatist had not heard of the modern biographical dictionary which can assuage grief if one is willing to make a liberal expenditure for a memoir and engraved portrait. So it was that the “ordering and marshalling of funerals” had come to be a part of the ostentation of pride as well as of grief. So much so that strife between the two reapers of harvests in these endeavors—the Kings of Arms, on the one side (those who tried to regulate the use of heraldic devices), and funeral undertakers and heraldic painters, on the other—came to blows. Parliament sided with the Kings of Arms in their attempt at a monopoly of the funeral perquisites, but their decision conflicted with the charter of the Painter-stainers Company, and the battle went on. Persons of standing often buried their dead in private, to avoid extortionate fees; while “others again”—to quote Edmondson—“under the notion of their dying seized of estates, had hatchments publicly affixed to the fronts of their houses.” In the Netherlands the hatchment, or family coat of arms on a lozenge, was “sett upon their doores for a yeare following, and the widowe so long kept her house.” This custom was observed by Fynes Moryson in his “Itinerary of the Year 1617,” and the Dutch of New Netherland may have brought the custom with them. Little, however, has yet been recorded of heraldic embroidery in New York or the South, although much has been written of social life there in Colonial times.

Hatchments were often painted on wood, like those to be seen in English churches. At St. Chad's, in Shrewsbury, for example, there are said to be over one hundred of these memorials of the dead. An excellent example is that brought to this country by William Avery, and now in the rooms of the Dedham Historical Society. More often, no doubt, they were done on canvas stretched over a wooden frame, to be carried in a funeral procession and then hung for a time in the church. The account of the funeral of Colonel Samuel Shrimpton, in 1697/8, mentions heraldic hatchments and death's heads as part of the panoply of grief. The hatchment was in the form of a diamond or lozenge, painted black, with the arms in color upon it in a shield. For a married person it was the custom to divide the lozenge, as well as the shield, by a perpendicular line, and to blacken the half of the lozenge which included the arms of the deceased person. The husband's arms were in the left half of the shield, and the wife's arms in the right half, as seen by the observer. (Heraldry, it should be said, views the coat as on an owner's breast, and the side next his right hand is the dexter side of the shield.)

How far an embroidered hatchment was in actual use at funerals in America cannot be known until specific statements from contemporary Colonial letters and diaries are brought together for study. Perhaps it was the reverential needlework of a gentle lady—an echo merely of an ancient custom, just as the giving of the right hand in greeting is a survival of the ancient sign of trust when one gave over the sword arm into the keeping of another, standing defenseless for the moment.

We may be certain, however, that on both sides of the Atlantic embroidered heraldry was in vogue. In an old English romance, reference is made to the custom of embroidering heraldic devices on the gowns of ladies:

"A Coronell on hur hedd set,
 Thur Clothys with bestes and byrdes wer bete
 all aboute for pryde."

Hulme, in his "History of Heraldry," writes:

"In the palmy days of heraldry ladies, if unmarried, wore the paternal arms embroidered on their robes, or if married, the paternal arms and those of their husband, one on either half of their dress, so that in old brasses, stained glass, etc., we may see the whole of the dexter half of the figure covered with certain devices, while the sinister half has entirely different forms and tinctures."

In 1773, Rebecca Robins sent to her uncle, John Rowe, the Boston merchant and diarist, an heraldic embroidery which she did at Exeter, in old England. The three little paschal lambs still carry their silver staves and banners, as they did in Rebecca's day. As early as 1715, we find Elizabeth, daughter of Captain John Charnock, of Boston, doing a hatchment of the Charnock arms impaling the arms of King, her mother. One or two examples in the seventeenth century might be named, but the eighteenth century was the period of heraldic embroidery in America. With many of these works of young hands there went stories of romance, if we could but conjure them back from the past. With more, perhaps, were tales of filial sorrow.

It is strange that the custom of embroidering arms seems to have been limited to New England in the New World. So far, none have been found without its bounds, and the period from 1750 to 1770 was by far the most prolific. One advertisement in the Boston Chronicle tells us who may have been responsible for the many hatchments and coats of arms which are found in and around Boston:

"Amy & Elizabeth Cumings"

"Hereby inform the public, that they have This day opened their School for instructing young ladies in embroidery, Coats of arms, Dresden, Catgut, and all sorts of coloured work, at their house on Corn Hill opposite the Old Brick Meeting, where they have to see, a great variety of Goods suitable for the season. Also blue China and yellow ware." (May 1st, 1769.)

Hatchments were most often done on a frame in what is known as ecclesiastical embroidery. They used gold and silver, and wonderful smooth silks. In nearly every case the whole surface was covered with silk, couched or done in long and short stitch, though some—such as Amy Davis's—were entirely worked in cross-stitch. A few combine the two forms. (See Plate cxxiv.)

Captain Nicholas Johnson, of Newburyport, in one of his voyages, in 1773, along the New England coast, came one day upon a deserted ship—perhaps

"As idle as a painted ship Upon a painted ocean"

or as weird and unhuman as the schooner, with shivering sails, watched by the lad of "Treasure Island" from his unstable coracle. Climbing on board, Johnson took from the cabin an embroidered hatchment, described in heraldic language as "Vert a chevron argent between three leopards' faces of the second. Impaling argent a chevron sable between three columbines azure." Above was a leopard's face pierced by a cruel sword. These three silver leopards' faces proclaim the Fitch family, and the columbine is the symbol of the Hall family. We find that this is probably the hatchment—or, to use the original term, the achievement—of Governor Thomas Fitch, of Connecticut, who married Hannah, daughter of Richard Hall, of New Haven. Was it wrought by the fair Hannah or by a daughter? And where was it bound on its lonely voyage? What a wealth of questioning a mystery like this may call forth! Here and in other examples the mantling or foliage is gracefully and effectively embroidered, showing the color and form with delightful precision. In the case of heraldic pictures (not in a diamond-shaped frame), the decoration is sometimes even more delicate, as in the shields of the Norwood or Gilbert families. (See Plates cxxi, cxxii, cxxiii, cxxv, cxxvi.)

Our ancestors knew little of the rules of heraldry and less about "the right to bear arms," a subject for endless controversy and of little profit. The distinguished Page family, of Virginia, complacently permitted the Pagit arms to adorn a Page family tomb. Thomas Jefferson, the great Democrat, sent to London, in 1771, for his family arms; and ordered his agent, in case none could be found, "to become a purchaser, haveing Sterne's word for it that a coat-of-arms may be purchased as cheap as any other coat." The love of symbolism is inborn, and "the right to bear arms" is only limited in our day by leisure to cultivate a taste for good design along heraldic lines, and a willingness to difference a coat so that it shall not give a false impression as to the ancestry of the user. Even these ideals our Colonial needle worker did not always take to heart. But, such as they are, these examples of heraldic embroidery have a human interest above and beyond that of most Colonial handiwork.
